

DR. AND MRS. A. M. SINCLAIR

Couple Now In Europe Are To Reside In Halifax

A lovely wedding was solemnized recently in St. Francis-in-the-Wood, West Rock, Vancouver when Audrey Marion Longhead, became the bride of Dr. Albert M. Sinclair.

The bride, who graduated in nursing from the Royal Columbian Hospital, is the daughter of Mrs. Charles Longhead of White Rock. The groom is the son of Mrs. Peter Sinclair of Charlottetown, Prince-Edward Island, and the late Mr. Peter Sinclair, M.P. He was a member of the Shaughnessy Military Hospital staff.

Rev. William Valentine conducted the ceremony and a reception followed at the home of the bride's godparents, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Stewart of Vancouver.

Given in marriage by Mr. Stewart, the bride wore a ballerina gown of silk brocade designed on princess lines. A coronet of pearls held the chapel veil of illusion net and the bride carried a bouquet of tiny bronze mums and stephanotis.

Miss Joan Longhead was her sister's only attendant, gowned in pale pink nylon with matching headress. Dr. Robert Tait of Vancouver was best man.

Dr. Sinclair was granted a fellowship by Dalhousie University and is now in Europe with his bride for a year's post graduate study in orthopedics. He will be touring centres in Scotland, Denmark, Germany, Holland, France and Italy. They will reside in Halifax on their return where Dr. Sinclair will be on the staff of the Dalhousie University. — Photo by D'Arcy Galleries, West Vancouver.

MARY HAWORTH

Child Sense A Situation

Dear Mary Haworth—My husband died four years ago and since then my life is spent giving happiness to my adopted son, now 8. I have taken a job where he can come in for lunch; and he is showered with love and affection by my relatives (during visits) as well as by me. His birthdays and Christmases are generously celebrated.

However, since my husband's death, gradually at first, Bertie (I'll call him) has developed a nasty temper and disobeys me. He talks back when corrected, until I lose patience and punish him. Then he hits, too. A point is won only after a big scene.

He often misbehaves this way in my sister's home—whose children never acted so. I find myself catering to his nastiness there, to try to keep peace. He seems to obey the men in the family—but pays no attention to his aunt or me.

His tempers are volcanic; you never know when he is going to start in, over any trifle that goes wrong or displeases him. He gets along well in school and with his playmates; but the minute he comes indoors from play, he acts up.

CLAIMS TO LOVE HER
He comes when I call, and obeys to a certain extent. But the problem is this terrible temper and nastiness of late. On the other hand, he takes care of me crossing streets, carries packages, etc., gets furious if anyone mistreats me in anyway, and says he loves me.

I can't understand his tempers, disobedience, continuous back talk, his hitting back, throwing things around and using bad language. We live in a nice house on a quiet street and rather than have bedlam I've tried to pacify him—which was a terrible mistake. I now realize. Please tell me what course to take. I love him dearly, and he is so lovable at times. K. Y.

Dear K. Y.—As your son is adopted, you are pretty much in the dark, I imagine, as to the hereditary materials that figure in his emotional make-up. That is to say, whether his inborn predisposition is towards placidity or unstable temperament.

Maybe he is running true to form, shaping up into a chip off the old block, in being such a stormy handful as he grows in years and stature. In short, maybe nature didn't design him to be a comfortably malleable child. I don't say this to discourage you or to discredit him; but rather to suggest the assignment you may have to work with.

It strikes me that your mistake, thus far, is in using more sentimentality than tough common sense, in making a life for yourself and Bertie. Foolishly you've made him the whole show, with yourself his doting slave—a performance that even a child (or perhaps especially a child) cannot respect, approve or consider desirable from any viewpoint.

SENSES WEAKNESSES

Children are uncannily shrewd in sensing and resenting—indeed actively despising and rejecting—an undercurrent of weak, uncertain, conciliatory behavior in a parent or guardian. From the child's angle, his safety depends upon the person-in-charge taking charge of the child; and managing him for his own good; and no halfway business about it. The guardian is supposed to know what to do, or what he wants done, and to be fully self confident in outlining procedures and seeing them through.

You get sharp and quarrelsome with Bertie because he doesn't meet you halfway, in a fellowship brand of co-operation, in response to your sentimental attitudes. (You feel let down, hurt and furious). Bertie rudely scorns this poppycock—which is more suited to sweethearts than to parent and child. And he throws temper tantrums at you—that signify his outrage, uneasiness and contempt, in dealing with a parent so far off the beam of mastery, peace, calm, strength, assurance, directness and so on.

Obviously the only constructive course open to you is a series of confidential talks with a psychologist in the field of family relations counselling. You need firsthand education in taking the reins of authority into your hands, in rearing Bertie. Bertie needs you to act in such a way that he can feel real respect for you, from a subordinate status of firmly managed and sensibly protected childhood. Stop using him as a substitute for husband and friends. M. H.

WIFE PRESERVERS

Did you ever stop to think that a broom can add dust as well as sweep it away? It's wise to wash a fiber or corn broom with clear water occasionally and hang it up to dry.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Wedges Of Pie Sure Are Aid To Domesticity

"Twenty-five to one!" James exclaimed, eyeing the clock. He slipped into his coat, picked up his cap and gloves from a table. "You might, Ellen," he smiled, "take a 'tower' to the stables through the afternoon, just to see that all's well."

"When?"
"Oh, after a bit—and perhaps again later on. An animal might get sick, or loose and into mischief. Have a look too in the piggeries. There'd be war there if some of them happened to get together. . . Well . . ." he turned at the door.

"You'll write?" we laughed.
"I'll write he smiled.
"Come! Mack called from the verandah. "If we don't hurry we're going to miss seeing the first of the judging! Dad's gone down to the truck."

In no time, it nosed up and over the hilltop bearing off the three to the seasonal Fat Stock Show and Sale at the Fair grounds in the city.
We watched it disappear, before we turned away from the window. Despite the brilliant sunshine, it would be, we concluded, an outing more and less chilly. Soup we should make for supper from some stock at hand. It would warm cold marrows. We would have to a slice of steak, smothered in onions as usual, and maybe, make an apple pie, we decided winking at the cat. . . .

"They're giving me advice" we recalled a little bride laugh a bit nervously at a gathering some years ago. "Auntie" she appealed to an older woman who had just come near "what do you say?"

"Feed him well, child" she twinkled. "That is the big secret of a happy wedded life. They'll forgive a lot of other short comings if you have a hand for cooking. Just remember there's been more than one big brave man caught—and kept to heel with tasteful wedges of pie!"
How quiet it was now—the house so still as it settled down to its dreams.

"Ho hum" the cat yawned, climbing to the couch. "How about you and me enjoying a siesta?" he smiled slyly.
We went to the sink, where the dinner dishes waited. Not many, but to be sure but none the easier to do if left until later. How blue the sky was and pretty the countryside beneath in its brightening touches of Spring.

What an enjoyable time the farmers would have, we reflected. Mack too watching the showing and judging of livestock. We smiled to think of it. In comparison, the most talented and beautiful lady in the land would be "but a woman" to be respected and passively admired, but these animals, dear, dear, were the cream of their kind from Island creek and stables, pictured creatures,
