Opening lead — king of diamonds.

It stands to reason that when declarer is playing a slam contract, which may involve a gain or a loss of perhaps 1,700 points, he should take more time and devote more thought to the project than when he is playing a game of part score contract.

A great many players with the South hand might quickly win the diamond lead, ruff a diamond, play the ace and another trump, and then discover that a trump and a club had to be lost for a one trick set. Possibly they might even lay the loss of the slam to the misfortune of a bad trump break, but if so, they would not have fully learned the lesson the hand carries.

Declarer's view from the beginning must be that there is danger of both a heart and a club being lost. Consequently, every step possible should be taken to see if either one loser or the other cannot be cut off.

The trump situation being one where the luck of the deal will play a large part, the main efforts should be devoted to saving the club loser. For this to be accomplished declarer should lay out a time schedule, so that the correct series of plays are made in their proper order to avoid the club loser.

About as good a method as any is to win the diamond, lead a spade to the king, and ruff a low spade. The king of hearts is cashed, followed by a heart-to-the-ace. (There is no sound reason to finesse the heart, unless declarer has had a peek).

The ace of spades is cashed, a club being discarded, and another spade is ruffed. The ten of spades is by this time an established trick.

Now a diamond can be ruffed in dummy, after which the club loser is discarded on the ten of spades. The only trick lost is the queen of hearts.

This sequence of plays is a vast improvement over the method first described, where practically all hopes were based on escaping a trump loser.
