A LAY SERMON.

Ye gentlemen who serve the British drama
With all the wit and wisdom of your pen,
Who from a highly cultivated Karma
Evince your views of manners and of men,
I would but ask, as one whom oft an order
Admits, a worshiper within your fanes,
Why ye deprecate your plays are growing broad—
(I trust the word sufficiently explains.)
Has decency so far gone out of fashion
That ye must needs, to catch the English folk,
Dip for your plots in troubled pools of passion
And bait your lines with spicy equivocal?
Why are your personages so full blooded?
Why nail such scarlet colors to your mast
And hold aloft as "she who must be studied"
The lady of th' apologetic past?
—Oxford Dick in "The Ways of the World."

CHAPLAINS IN THE NAVY.

Branch of Service Regarding Which but Little is Known.

Beyond the main fact that a clergyman is always to be found on board a man-of-war the public knows hardly anything of chaplains in the navy. This is not due, however, to the unimportance of the corps. At present every chaplain, with a single exception, is actively employed either on a man-of-war or at an important shore station. The secretary of the navy declares that the work of a chaplain is very highly appreciated on shipboard by most of the commanding officers and that the moral effect of their influence upon the men is noticeably good. There are but 24 chaplains in the entire service, and acquaintance with the personnel of the corps leads one to believe that the standard of fitness has been kept high by the appointing power. The regulations require that an applicant as chaplain be between the ages of 21 and 25 years and a minister in good standing in his denomination. In addition to these qualifications practice requires the hearty and unequivocal indorsement of high ecclesiastical authorities, who are willing to assume a good degree of moral responsibility for the appointment. Political influence of a high order may be used to bring the applicant to the attention of the president and secretary of the navy, but can avail very little beyond this. The chaplain, once appointed, ranks as a commissioned officer of the staff, messes in the wardroom when on shipboard and is entitled to a private stateroom in the wardroom quarters.

He wears no uniform and in this is the sole exception to the rule which obtains on all the ships of our navy and applies to all officers and enlisted men, from the admiral of the fleet to the humblest mess attendant. Nothing invidious is involved in this discrimination, and it is to be presumed that if a majority of the chaplains were to ask for a uniform it would be granted. The chaplains as a rule dress in ordinary clerical suits, the coats close buttoned, and in blouse or frock, according to circumstances. In conducting divine service each chaplain is permitted to employ the order used in his own denomination and may also use the vestments of his church, if any.—Chicago Chronicle.

Looking Indian.
Somebody dropped a stickpin in the hall the other day and had hard work to find it. She hunted high and low, and on her hands and knees, and with a candle specially procured for the purpose, but it was no use; the pin was very tiny and unperceivable, its value being that of association rather than size or brilliancy. The somebody, after a final shake of the rags, was just about to give it up forever when one of the children chanced to come along. "Why don't you look 'Indian' for it?" he asked. Before the somebody realized what was meant down dropped the youngster on the floor, his head and his whole body lying sidewise and just as close to the dead level as possible. In this position his eyes roved rapidly over the floor. "I have it," he shouted presently, and sure enough, right in the middle of the floor, in so plain a place that it had escaped notice, was the missing stickpin. The youngster then explained that "looking Indian" meant putting the head to the ground in order to catch sight of the smallest object between oneself and the horizon. "They do it on the plains all the time," he said. "That's why they can always tell who's coming. But it works in houses just as well as on the plains. Why, we never lose anything in the nursery nowadays—we just 'look Indian' and find it right off."—New York Sun.

The World.
This world is not a very fine place for a good many of the people in it. But I've made up my mind it shan't be the worse for me if I can help it. They tell me I can't alter the world—that there must be a certain number of sneaks and robbers in it, and if I don't lie and flinch somebody else will. Well, then, somebody else shall, for I won't.—Felix Holt (George Eliot).

In 1847 the city of Carlsruhe had a theater fire by which 63 lives were lost. This led to the formation in the neighboring town of Durlachs of the first volunteer fire company in Germany.

THE HOME.

Some Practical Points For Healthfulness In Heating and Ventilating.

There are two helps to a good and healthful home atmosphere (and fresh complexion) to be considered—freshness and moisture. Ignorance is apt to regard everything outside of its personal experience as stupid "faddism," or, more harshly, "crankism." So these suggestions are addressed to the intelligent only. Dead air, like dead wood, has but little heating power. We have all endured the experience of being in an atmosphere hot enough to produce headache, yet feeling chilly. That air was vitiated and dead and would disgust even the ignorant in its analysis. It is a perfectly simple matter to change the air in any part of the house, and a servant should understand the order "Change the air" in such and such rooms as readily as to change the tablecloth for dinner. You have only to open wide doors and windows for a quick sweeping through of a fresh current from outside, and the thing is accomplished. Do not open one window to do it gradually, as the walls and contents of the rooms become chilled—a wasteful and uncomfortable result. Literally "change the air," and do it as quickly as possible. You will find the plan a great economy in heat, aside from the benefits to health and comfort. Many houses are provided with arrangements for continuous ventilation, but even in these the quick, radical changes of air will not come amiss. Fresh air heats up so quickly, and its lightness and very perceptible freshness are most welcome.

Now as to moisture, the other factor in a healthful atmosphere, furnaces and other cellar heating apparatus are usually provided with arrangements for evaporating water, but from neglect to keep these filled or some other cause the air of furnace heated houses is always dry, unless some special provision against such dryness has been made.

A good plan is to put regular dripping pans beneath the registers, and no one but the person keeping these filled will credit the amount evaporated daily therefrom. With steam heat open vessels filled with water should be placed upon the radiators. In handsomely appointed rooms brass vessels, as jardiniere or granite dripping pans, with open filigree brass covers, made for the purpose, may be provided. If appearances are not a consideration, any porcelain lined pan will serve admirably.—Ella Morris Kretschmar in Woman's Home Companion.

THE BATTLE FOR LIFE.

It takes staunch hearts and healthful bodies to win in the struggle for existence. Many can't stand the pace on account of poor blood and disordered systems. They fall by the way and are trampled down by the wealth-thirsty thousands who follow.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt.

has made many strong and healthful—it will do the same for you. Here is what an eminent English physician says of it:
From Dr. W. H. Wright, L.R.C.P., L.M., M.R.C.S.E., L.S.A., Medical Officer of Health, London Eng.

"I have great pleasure in bearing testimony to your excellent preparation. I take it every morning before my cold bath, and it keeps me in the best of health and spirits. I may say by its continued use during a terrible epidemic of La Grippe, I escaped an attack, although often worn out with the extra fatigue and great strain put upon me when grappling with it. It keeps the blood cool and allays fever, and thus keeps the system in a condition of insusceptibility to Diphtheria, Fevers, and other blood disorders."

Abbey's Effervescent Salt is worth its weight in gold as a family medicine. All druggists sell this great English Preparation. Price 2/6 or 6/6 a bottle. Our little booklet, "An Invitation to Health," is yours for the asking.
