

FEEDING POTATOES TO LIVE-STOCK

Potatoes are more watery than most people realize, for they have less dry matter and less total digestible nutrients than well-earned corn silage.

of the regular dry mash and fed as a warm, moist mash. When potatoes are added to the ration, it must be borne in mind that they are very low in protein and that they do not supply vitamin A value.

FEEDING POTATOES SPECIFICALLY TO HOGS

Potatoes should not be fed hogs raw. They must be boiled. The solids in boiled potatoes bear a close relationship to barley and corn in carbohydrates and protein.

Due to their bulky nature and high carbohydrate content, potatoes should not be fed until the growing pig weights 75 pounds. After the growing has reached approximately 75 lbs. potatoes can be fed in fairly large quantities with excellent results.

DAIRY COWS

For dairy cows, potatoes are a satisfactory substitute for corn silage, being nearly equal to silage in value per ton when 24 to 40 lbs. are fed per head daily.

BEEF

Cull potatoes have been used satisfactorily in place of corn silage for fattening beef cattle and beef breeding cows.

HORSES

Horses may be fed potatoes, cooked or raw, in amounts up to 15 or 20 lbs. per head daily.

PIGS

When potatoes are fed to pigs as a partial substitute for grain in well-balanced rations, it requires about 400 lbs. of potatoes (weighed before cooking) to equal 100 lbs. of grain.

POULTRY

Boiled or steamed potatoes are a satisfactory substitute for part of the grain for poultry. The cooked potatoes, after being mashed, may be mixed with an equal weight ing Competitions will be held, and at that evening the National winners will be declared in all the nine classifications. This is an annual event sponsored by the Canadian Council on 4-H Clubs, and is made possible by the active support of thirty-four business organizations, along with the Federal and Provincial Departments of Agriculture who are members, and the twelve National Agricultural Associations who are associate members. The judging competitions only occupy one day of the week and the rest of the time is taken up by visits to the University of Toronto, a bus trip to Niagara Falls and Hamilton, attendance at the Horse Show at the Royal Winter Fair, and a Hockey Game at the Maple Leaf Gardens. The group also spend a day in Ottawa as guests of the Canada Department of Agriculture.

This Province will be represented by four teams representing Dairy Cattle, Poultry, Garden, and Sewing Clubs. The members will leave on Friday morning, November 11th, and will spend Saturday November 12th in Montreal, arriving in Toronto early Sunday morning.

This trip to National Club Week and the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto is something that these members will have to remember in years to come, and the contacts that they make, and the impressions they bring back with them will help to improve their own farms, the other Club members, and their own lives.

RELIGION AND LIFE

By Very Rev. George C. Fidgeon, D.D., LL.D. First Moderator of the United Church of Canada

DIFFERENT WAYS OF COMING OF CHRST.

"My Christianity or yours" was the first way in which I wrote the title of this article. But to have accepted that as our theme would have meant giving away the truth we are trying to set forth.

It is not a case of "either . . . or" as we contemplate different types of spiritual experience; it is rather "both . . . and."

St. Luke gives us a story of Jesus which bears on this point; "John answered, 'Master, we saw a man casting out demons in your name, and we forbade him, because he does not follow with us.' But Jesus said to him, 'Do not forbid him; for he that is not against you is for you.'" (Luke 8:49-50).

Our attention was turned in this direction by a letter recently written by a young convert to other members of his spiritual fellowship. He referred to the marvelous experience of Christ's saving grace which had made all things new for him, and then described the difficulty he had met when he tried to bring his family to his new point of view.

He said that it was so hard to get them to see the difference between "a nominal Christianity" and the type of experience that had made him new, he thinks.

There are two things here that arrest attention. The first is the new relationship with the living Christ into which this youth had been brought and the change it had made in his attitude toward life; the second is his judgment on others who are now, he thinks, what he was before the great change.

Now there is no doubt of the reality of this sort of spiritual transformation. When Jesus and Him crucified is presented as a living Saviour, men are won to Him and thereby renewed in nature from the heart out.

EVERY GENERATION

St. Paul's experiences in Athens in Corinth have been repeated in every generation since — philosophizing about Christ produces little; presenting Christ crucified and risen is the power of God and the wisdom of God. It is a strength to our faith and an encouragement to the workers in our churches to hear the new emphasis being placed today on the Gospel of the grace of God and the rich results that follow.

But is it not a mistake to assume that all Christian experience must be of the same type and all Christian character cast in the same mould?

Years ago a man got his little car mired when he turned out to meet another car on a country road. He went to a farm-house near by and asked the man to bring out his team and help him. The man refused gruffly. He had just put his team away after a hard day's work, and he and they were too tired to turn out again. So the victim had to walk a long distance to ask a man whom he knew to help, and this man, equally tired and at his evening meal, sprang up, harnessed his team, and helped his victor back on the road.

ly deeply evangelical in its faith and who strives for years in vain to gain the experience that made her fathers what they were. Then she turned to another church, and in its sacramental worship found the grace that satisfied her heart. For her this was the way of God. On the other hand, a Quaker, in speaking of this form of worship, said: "When they say they are blessed through the sacraments; but, when they claim that this is the only way to God, we must affirm that we know another."

Why should I judge my brother when I see him following Christ? His theology differs from mine, but his response to the demands of every situation is Christlike; one cannot but recognize that he is doing what he feels Jesus wants him to do. What I need is to learn his secret. Perhaps it might help him if he knew mine.

Dear Inge was a great churchman. All that his church had to give he assimilated gladly and made it the source of his inspiring message to the world. But Dean Inge had a high opinion of the Quakers and paid generous tribute to the reality of their communion with God. It is the very essence of the testimony of the Ecumenical movement that each church finds something in Christ peculiarly its own and that others need what it can give.
