Granddaddy's "Spoiling" Is A Good Thing In Life

With the assistance of Granddaughter and Mack we set a hen this evening. Or to be more exact we settled her on a skeleton hatch of eggs to determine whether or not she was suited to the task. The farmers were then at the chores, herding day-pasturing young-uns to the stables, bringing in too today's lambskins to shelter and such ewes as expected present events.

"We want to borrow a fork and shovel!" Granddaughter bit ahead of us to the barnyard said to James.

"I suppose" he tumbled with a smile in the one meant for our ears "your Grandma's going to do some gardening now! Working coming on evening."

"Oh, no!" she replied brightly "she's going to set a hen."

"Set a hen!" he exclaimed.

"Yes" she giggled, "she likes the look of a hen and chickens about. She enjoys... what was it you said...?"

"I'm seeing the maternal instinct a hen displays" we chuckled.

"Rabbit hutch" Granddaughter said, overpouring James' expressive "Humph!" "But first it has to be cleaned."

"I suppose it's O.K. if I take part of this bale of straw" Mack commented in a half-question already appropriating it from the barn-floor. "It's to line the nest."

"There, there— not so much!" James admonished. "You have enough there to set all the hens on our road."

"She has to sit for three weeks, so she needs to have it nice and soft" Mack smiled. He knew if he left the entire contest of the nest above, James would make an effort to give it to him. If at the outset he might refuse, a first howl would weaken him! He is and always has been like that with children. Spoiling them with affection.

"They have their own trials — the poor little dears" he wails — not the least of which to his mind is "to be shut up all day in school."

"Well, t h a n k s Granddaddy" particular test except the test of time which runs the man. Nor have we any remedy to prevent him from becoming an addict. Three in ten drinkers take this chance. In total abstinence is the only safe way."

W.C.T.U. Member Sends Quote Of Dr. W. J. Mayo

1. How can we define moderate drinking? Moderate drinking is hard to define. What may seem moderate for one person may prove to be dangerous to another. The weight and temperament of the drinker makes a noticeable difference even when the same amount of the same alcoholic beverage is taken. Also whether the liquor is taken with or without food.

2. Is not moderate drinking an accepted social custom widely in Canada today. Lavish liquor advertising has helped create a sort of cocktail psychology. Attractive pictures in magazines showing "Men of Distinction" and "Women of Good Taste" has helped to strengthen social approval of the serving of liquor, often without a choice of a non-alcoholic beverage. Liquor creates a taste for more liquor and "good fellowship calls for another round."

3. How can we answer the claim that though excessive drinking and drunkenness are offensive, moderate drinking is a permissible social pleasure? Granted moderate drinking is less offensive than excessive drinking it is little safer nor beyond question. For many persons even a little liquor affects the ability to judge their own actions. Self criticism and even will power becomes confused.

4. A man takes a drink, then the drink takes another.

5. Do scientists pronounce liquor as habit forming? Many authoritative statements to prove this could be quoted. Dr. Lawrence Kolb says "Alcohol is definitely habit-forming. Dr. Andrew C. Ivy of the University of Illinois, who works with a staff of 35 research scientists, says: "One out of every 16 casual moderate social drinkers becomes an alcoholic. One out of nine becomes a problem drinker. There is still good sense in the Bible warning "Touch not. Taste not. Handle not."

6. Some drivers claim: they drive better after a glass of liquor, what about moderate drinking and traffic accidents? Dr. James Black tells of a taxi-driver who said: "After my first glass of whiskey I drive better." His passenger replied: "No you don't! You only think you do; that first glass destroyed your clear judgment and self criticism!"

Liquor is an anaesthetic like ether, and dulls the perceptions of the mind as well as slowing up the responses of the muscles, eyes, etc.

Dr. Joslyn Rogers, Ontario government, on traffic accidents has attributed 45 per cent of highway accidents to the use of alcoholic beverages.

Even the distillers say: "If you drive, don't drink."

6. Is the danger of a moderate drinker becoming an alcoholic really very great?

In 1956 there were 76,000 alcoholics in Ontario. One in six is a woman. There will probably be another 1,000 new addicts this year.

Dr. W. J. Mayo of Rochester says: "We cannot tell in advance what moderate drinker may become an addict. We have no par-

HAPPENINGS

The provincial executive of the Prince Edward Island Women's Institute had luncheon Tuesday at the Queen Hotel.

The Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, popularly known as the Met, is making its annual visit to Toronto. The boxes and balconies are filled with Canada's glittering society set. But these people do not represent just a superficial music crowd. Many hold Conservatory degrees and are most discriminating listeners. However, it is the upper balconies that are filled with the serious music students or the Torontonians budgeting for one of their loves of the year "the opera season."

This time the Met will offer two new productions among the six operatic works to be presented. One of them is a presentation in English of Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin, in which George London sings the title role. The opera itself — in any form of staging — hasn't been performed publicly in Toronto.

The other production is Yoshio Aoyama's staging of Puccini's Madame Butterfly with designs by Motokuro Nagaska. According to Opera News, the production of the Metropolitan Opera Guild, the new sets combine authenticity of detail with the effect of a Japanese lacquer panel — cool greens, flat golds and heavy outlines. Mr. Cornelius Starr, a New York business man with wide interests in the Far East, made a gift of the settings to the Met.

So it is the opera's back with some offerings new to the local Toronto audience, but which promise to be the year's outstanding musical events.
