Where the King and Queen had a Home of Their Own

When Their Majesties, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, spent a brief rest period at Jasper Park Lodge on their journey eastward through the Rockies, they had a little home all their own. Except for two personal servants, they lived alone in Outlook Cottage, a beautifully appointed log cabin on the shore of Lac Beauvert and they expressed great pleasure at the opportunity to enjoy complete rest, free from formality. The photograph shows them on the lawn in front of their cabin. Looking across the lake, they could see the white peak of Mount Edith Cavell. They afterwards visited it by motor car and climbed on the ice of its glacier.

A message of appreciation was sent to S. J. Hungerford, Chairman and President of the Canadian National Railways by Their Majesties from the Royal Train after their departure from Jasper. The message, signed by Alan F. Lascelles, acting Private Secretary, read: "The King and Queen left Jasper this morning with great regret and much appreciate all that was done for their comfort and amusement during their enjoyable stay there."
