

SOLDIER AND CHILD

In every country he has served the Canadian soldier has won a reputation for his sympathetic interest in children. And the trouble of Middle East is no exception, despite language difficulties.

Here Cpl. Earl White, of Sydney N.S., and Camp Borden, Ont., provides a snack for an Egyptian child, nicknamed "Fatima," who, with two other children, helped him out with the kitchen chores. "Fatima" has become a favorite with the troops stationed at the Royal Canadian Army Service Corps camp at Al Arish.

Maritime Member Says Down Payment On House Too High

OTTAWA (CP) — J. C. Van Horne, Progressive Conservative MP for Restigouche-Madawaska, heaped burning coals on the government Saturday. In a 40-minute budget debate speech in the Commons, he covered the waterfront of Maritimes problems as he charged the Liberal government has been giving the Canadian people a "blind eye" for 21 years.

Mr. Van Horne spoke of "to-bacco road" conditions of northern New Brunswick and the people who live there in tar-paper shacks "where there is no proper floor—only one room, and 10 children living in one shack." The reason they lived under such conditions was that down payments required under federal housing legislation were too high. They should be $400 on $10,000 homes, as in the United States, instead of $3,100.

Our employment insurance, he asked: "Why cannot the Unemployment Insurance Commission just make up its mind that our people cannot wait anywhere from four to eight weeks for their unemployment cheques? . . . If our people do not receive their cheques many of them cannot buy the necessities of life."

UNPOPULAR WITH LIBERALS Mr. Van Horne said, in effect, he doesn't care if he's not popular with the Liberals: "I did not come here to join a popularity contest sponsored by the Liberal party. I came here to do a job for people who have been neglected for many years, not only by the Liberal government but by all governments since Confederation."

Of Liberal nomination conventions in prospect of a June election, he said: "On Sunday, March 17, they insulted the people of many faiths in my riding by holding a convention on Sunday afternoon while church services were being held—especially since it was St. Patrick's Day."

Jean-Paul St. Laurent (L-Temiscouata) the prime minister's son, had berated him at the convention, Mr. Van Horne said. "If," he said, "the reverent fathers (Louis O'Neill and Gerard Dion) wish to know how elections are fought and how votes are bartered for pieces of silver and television sets, I suggest to them they follow a campaign of the honorable member for Temiscouata."

Inco Research helps Canada grow

Last October, with spring coming on in Little America, thirty-eight massive sleds began snaking their way across shelf ice, carrying hundreds of tons of supplies on a rigorous 600-mile trek to a U.S. geophysical expedition at an outpost near the South Pole. The sleds were especially designed and built right here in Canada. Essential parts of the sleds are made of ductile iron, a relatively new alloy developed by Inco metallurgists after years of research. These ductile iron parts have withstood the severe Antarctic conditions in fine style.

Lifeline for Antarctic Expedition

Ductile iron, a research development of Inco, is used for parts on Canadian-made sleds carrying supplies to South Pole.

For generations, metallurgists and foundrymen had been trying to develop a metal as strong as steel and as easy to cast as ordinary grey iron. After years of research, Inco metallurgists came up with the answer in the development of ductile iron. Ductile iron is a type of cast iron that can be twisted and bent without breaking. It has many other remarkable characteristics. For example, in these heavy duty sleds, used by the South Pole expedition, the ductile iron parts withstand heavy stresses at temperatures as low as 70° below zero F. Ductile iron is only one of many important products developed by Inco research. For research is as much a part of Inco's operations as the production of metals. Through research, Inco helps stimulate the growth of Canadian industry and provides jobs in Canada.
