Expect Steel Demand Boost NEW YORK (AP)—The average American steel purchaser expects to buy 20 to 25 per cent more steel in the second half of the year than in the first six months, says Iron Age, the national trade weekly.

The low point in the steel market was hit in April the magazine says, and new order volume has since gone along on an even keel for four straight weeks, with some mild improvement by diversified customers.

The magazine foresees another dip in July, largely for seasonal reasons such as hot weather, plant vacations, and longer than usual automotive shutdowns for new-model changeovers.
