OUR GRAND DISPLAY

SPRING CLOTHING AND FURNISHINGS

IS VERY TEMPTING.

The Custom Tailoring Department is full of Neat, Nobby and Reliable Goods.

The Men's Department is loaded with an immense display of New Spring Suits. The Hat Department—well, everybody understands that our Hat Department has advantages over the smaller establishments that place it at the head, and secures for it the bulk of the trade. We are displaying the largest variety of Spring Styles of Hats ever shown, and include all the popular shapes. The Boys' Department is unquestionably the best and most attractive in the city. The Furnishing Goods Department is not only well stocked with all that is solid and staple, but contains much that is choice and novel.

No doubt about it. Ours is the largest and best selected stock ever seen in this city,—not only largest in quantity, but largest in variety of shapes,—largest in variety of materials,—largest in correct styles,—largest in every way. What more could we say, unless it be that OUR PRICES ARE RIGHT,—RELIABLE, HONEST.

Rome.

Where are the footprints of the ancient dead, Who dwelt and wrought in Rome and made mankind? What memory have the mighty left behind In this imperial place where they were bred? Like minute-sands the centuries have sped To cover nations with their dust-cloved blind; Fragments of beauty past are all we find, Whose purpose, with the flying years, is fled. In this vast universe is left no place For that fleet breath that floating man calls Fame. Those stones, that mind us of some fading name, And watched the passing of earth's strongest race, Will vanish too; the long years hold no grace For earth's memorials of praise and blame.

BETWEEN TWO STOOLS.

[CONCLUDED.]

'Lottie,' said Alice, as the two seated themselves on a bench inside the screen of roses, 'I suspect Tom isn't pleased, and really, I think you are treating him badly.' 'How so?' 'You are not kind to him. You know he loves you, and until within a few days, I felt sure that you loved him.' 'Oh, well, we like each other well enough. What have I done to bring upon myself, one of your solemn lectures?' 'If you really love Tom, why do you encourage Mr. Redmond?' 'Why, Alice, I'm not married to Tom yet, and I don't know that I ever shall be. And, my dear, you ought to know in secret—it's always a good thing to have two strings to your bow. It gives you a choice, you know; for if one should fail, you have the other to depend upon.' 'Lottie, you're not in earnest?' 'Indeed, I am. I like Tom. He's handsomer than Archie Redmond, and richer, too, with this fine farm all his own and the money his father left him; but some would say that Mr. Redmond was a better match altogether.'

'Why, Lottie, if you really think in this way, you cannot really care for them. I felt sure that you and he would make a match.' 'Well, it isn't impossible. Only he hasn't asked me yet.' 'But he will.' 'Lottie laughed. 'Suppose he don't? Then I may have Archie Redmond to fall back upon. And suppose I can't get Archie? Then there is Tom.'

Tom Wheeler rose up slowly from the sofa, and walked softly from his room, out into the yard and garden.

'So that is her game, is it? I would not have believed it of her. Two strings to one bow? Two stools to sit upon, rather. Well, she'll come to the ground for any support that she'll get out of me.'

The picnic was a very pleasant affair to everybody but Tom Wheeler. Strive as he would against it, he was consumed with jealousy and disappointment; and his unhappiness was apparent to most lookers-on. Even Mr. Archie Redmond perceived it.

'What is the matter with Tom Wheeler?' he said, as the latter turned away after giving an abrupt reply to a remark of his: 'He is not like himself to-day.'

The inquiry was addressed to his cousin, Miss Redmond; but Miss Tiptlett, the gossip and news-monger of the neighborhood, took upon herself to reply.

'Why, Mr. Redmond,' she said archly, 'you ought to know if any one does.'

'I? What have I to do with it?' 'What a look of injured innocence! But really you ought to be ashamed to flirt so and cut out poor Tom Wheeler, you naughty man!'

And Miss Tiptlett smilingly showed her false teeth, and playfully tapped Mr. Redmond with her fan.

'Really, Miss Tiptlett, you speak in mysteries.'

'You do not really mean to say that you did not know that Tom Wheeler is as good as engaged to Lottie Steward? Why, it's been an understood thing for at least a year past.'

Redmond colored. He had admired Lottie, and been struck with her pretty face and sweet manners; and this news regarding her somewhat affected him unpleasantly.

'I never before heard of this,' he said quietly.

'Is it possible? But then you have been here so short a time. Well, in that case we will exonerate you. But there is no excuse for Lottie. A girl who can change so suddenly as she has towards Tom Wheeler, must be altogether heartless.'

Archie Redmond overheard one or two other similar remarks during the day, and watching Lottie closely, he saw that while she gave him undoubted encouragement, she yet seemed anxious to not entirely break off with Tom.

He was pained, for he had, unconsciously to himself, become interested in the pretty, sprightly girl.

'She is deceiving either him or myself,' he thought, 'and in either case is not the right sort of a girl for me.'

—and I'm going home with mamma and the rest. Not half so nice as walking, is it?'

Poor Lottie! Both her bow strings had failed her—a predicament she had not foreseen, or to accept Tom's version, between two stools she had come to the ground. However, a kind neighbor gave her a 'bit' in his wagon, in which situation she had the mortification of seeing Mr. Redmond drive past in Mrs. Calvert's carriage, beside pretty May Calvert, while Tom and Alice, in the new buggy, had left them far behind.

She was angry with Tom, though she had to admit that it was all her own fault. And when she left the farm, a few days after, she and Tom had not quite made up; neither had Archie Redmond again called upon her.

Lottie had promised to spend another fortnight at the farm, and she made up her mind that she would be satisfied with Tom and marry him after all. But before the time for her visit came she had heard two astounding reports: Mr. Archie Redmond was to be married to his cousin, Miss Marion Redmond, and Alice Brown was engaged to Tom Wheeler. There were to be two big weddings, and Lottie was invited to both. There is no doubt but that she was bitterly disappointed, for, as she confessed, she really liked Tom. But she had also to admit that only herself was to blame. She had tried to sit on two stools at once, and she had come to the ground.

Mimigash Notes.

The fishing up to the present has been very dull. Of herring, however, there has been a fair catch. Mackerel have not made their appearance yet. Lobsters are very scarce at present, and several of the factories have discharged some of their hands.

What nearly resulted in a serious accident the other day was while the efficient Harbor Master was moving a vessel from the Breakwater, the mooring line in some way got a turn around his leg, and there being a swift current running at the time, he was taken off his feet. Only for the timely assistance of some persons standing near, who caught the end of the rope and held it, the result might have been serious.

Killed with a Bat.

On Saturday evening about half-past six o'clock, a sad accident occurred on Ann Street, Portland, which resulted fatally to a little boy, six years old, son of Mr. John McDonnell. He was standing or passing near where a young man named Williams was batting in a game of ball, and was accidentally struck in the forehead with the bat. After the first stunning effect of the blow he recovered consciousness, and was able to walk about. On Tuesday he became worse, and Dr. Wm. Christie was called in, but was unable to save his life. Mr. McDonnell was in Fredericton at the time of the sad occurrence, and was called home. Much sympathy is felt for the parents so suddenly bereaved.—St. John Telegraph.

A despatch from Teheran states that 1,000 Persians are at work constructing the Trans-Caspian Railway. The Russians are bridging the river Murahab, on the confines of Afghanistan. In his Arbor Day proclamation the governor of Kansas says that the state, which the pioneers found treeless and a desert, has now more than 200,000 acres of forest trees, all planted by settlers, and meteorologists assert that there has been a consequent great increase in the rainfall.
