THE PRETTY SCHOOLMISTRESS.

(Concluded.)

"I should think she did. I just took her in my arms and let her have her cry out, while I explained to her how she had been mistaken for Sam, and became the victim of your mad pranks."

"That was neat in you, Han. I'm awful glad you hugged the poor thing. I wish you had given her a brotherly hug for me—upon my honor I do. Oh, dear! I'm in sackcloth and ashes from this time henceforth and forever," replied George, with another dismal groan.

"And how on earth do you expect us to stay and take the consequences?" said John, beginning to look serious. "I am for taking myself off immediately. I'd rather face a masked battery than this pretty teacher, after making such fools of ourselves."

"I don't care if you would," answered his sister indignantly. "The only way is to brave it out, both of you, and apologize for your rudeness. She is not a bit stupid, but pleasant and merry, and no doubt you will all have a jolly laugh over the affair."

"But Sam, you know, how the deuce are we going to get along with him? You know well enough, Han, we shall never hear the last of it from him, and that it will be brought up at all times and places."

"If you two can keep the secret, I'll find a way to silence Bridget, and it's a subject that Maude will not care to have discussed, and rather fortunately, my husband is away. So go to bed, and rest contented."

"She showed him the room she had intended them to occupy, and she soon all was quiet again.

Meanwhile their brother Sam had reached the depot a few minutes too late. He found the train he was to have taken gone, but upon consulting a time table he ascertained that another train started two hours later, and so he decided to take it. He figured to himself, as he impatiently crowded along at a rapid rate, how snugly his brothers had ensconced themselves in the best room, which by right belonged to him, he being the eldest, and consummated a little plan to get even with them.

Sometime after midnight he was deposited at Hollythorne, and reaching his sister's house he scouted around until he found a way of entrance into the kitchen, where he dropped his luggage and removed his boots.
Then he quietly stole up stairs and opened the door of the best room. "Sure enough," thought he, "my fine chaps, you're in clover, for there were not-to-be-mistaken signs of the room being occupied. Garments were lying upon chairs, and the bed was pressed by what appeared to be a couple of slumbering forms."

To think of coping with their united strength by dragging them forth was not practicable, but there stood the pitcher of water, and he knew that a good dousing with the icy fluid would bring them out quick enough.

"If I can't have my old quarters," he chuckled, "you sha'n't—that I'm determined.
So here goes."

He lifted the pitcher, approached the bed, and dexterously dashed the entire contents on the innocent sleeper.

Such a torrent of screams he had never before heard ring through the house, and before Sam could collect his scattered thoughts, door after door opened, and Hannah, John and George rushed in—in scanty apparel—Hannah with a frightened look on her face and a lamp in her hand, that revealed the entire scene.

There sitting in a bed, with hair dripping like a mermaid, her nightdress deluged, her face colorless and looking terrified, sat Maude, and there was Sam with the empty pitcher in hand, the very picture of im-becility, staring like an idiot at her and the havoc he had made.

Hannah, George and John instantly comprehended the situation, and the latter, at the command of their sister, yanked Sam away, while she assisted the dripping and terrified girl to dry her clothing, and then took her to her own room and bed, explaining for the second time the mishaps of the night.

"I'll keep you with me now, my poor child," she said, though with difficulty keeping back her laughter.

"These boys are nicely come up with at any rate," continued Hannah, "and if it wasn't for your being so frightened, and the way my best bed is used up, I would not care. They do nothing when they come home but study tricks to play on each other, and they are so confined in their offices and stores during most of the year, that they let entirely loose when they are out here. But you are safe now."

Hannah kissed her charge, and then went down to see about the boys, who as soon as they were shut up in the region below, began to fully appreciate the joke, and now that Sam was as deep in the mud as they were in the mire, they gave no quarter.

"I'll be blamed if I know what it all means," said Sam, looking at his brothers, who were rolling and kicking in convulsions of laughter.

"Wait," replied George, "until Hannah comes, and see if you don't find out, and have another peal of laughter."

Sam had not smiled, but sat looking the picture of discomfort and perplexity, and answered:

"For heaven's sake, hold on boys! I am willing to admit that I'm sold—gone dog chasing to the highest bidder—but hold on long enough to tell a fellow what it means."

"Means! Of course I will," continued George. "It means that you have stolen like a thief into Miss Stanley's chamber—who is a lady teacher boarding around; that this is her week here; and thinking it was your humble servant and Johnny snug in the bed, you attempted to drown us out, and made a grand mistake. 'How do you like it, Sam?'"

"I confess I see the point, but can't see the joke. It's a most outrageous shame." At this juncture Hannah came in and began raving them soundly, thereby letting the whole story out.

It was Sam's turn then to laugh, and the whole thing was so completely ridiculous that he was compelled to join his brothers.

Miss Maude was not visible at the table the next morning, and Hannah stated that she was sick with a severe cold; whereupon George groaned and called for a handful of peas to put in Sam's shoes, while that gentleman looked very contrite, and John declared he wanted to shoot himself.

But Hannah had the unruly crew under her thumb for once in her life, and had the satisfaction of seeing them behave with something of dignity. They appeared to never forget that there was an invalid in the house, and went on tiptoe about; and Sam, who seemed to take the entire responsibility upon his shoulders, sent off to New York for some choice fruits and flowers, which he induced his sister to convey to the young sufferer with the most abject apologies and regrets.

In a couple of days Maude was able to come down stairs. She was looking quite pale, but lovely, and of course divinely, when presented by Mrs. Carpenter to her brothers, who behaved quite well considering the unpleasantness of their situation.

But Sam, who had broken the ice by means of his presents, was most at ease, and by virtue of his age and experience constituted himself the proprietor, and was constantly on hand to offer the pretty schoolmistress a thousand nameless attentions, and before the week was out John declared in confidence to Hannah that Sam was done for.

"Gone up completely!" echoed George, with one of his dismal groans.

"Just think of it, Han, if it hadn't been for the pitcher of water Sam would have been heart-whole this very minute. The fellow meets lots of girls much prettier than she every day, and with lots of stamps, too.
They say that pisy is twin sister to love, and I believe it."

"Sour grapes!" whispered John, puckering up his mouth.

Hannah sang Maude's praises and secretly commended Sam's choice. She recommended marriage to all of them as the only sobering process she was acquainted with.
They do not feel inclined to follow the advice, notwithstanding Sam's happy lot with the pretty school mistress of Holly-thorne.

She often reminds her brother-in-law of her unceremonious introduction to a snow-drift at the dead of night, and they retaliate by referring to the shower-bath given her by Sam.
