

UPEI CHEMISTRY DEPARTMENT HOSTS GUESTS

by Todd MacLaughlan

Last Friday, October 12th, the U.P.E.I. Chemistry Department was visited by two distinguished representatives from the Chemical Institute of Canada. Hosted by Professor Leon Loucks, Dr. Louis Renzoni - this year's President of the Chemical Institute of Canada and Mr. Glynn Micheal - the Executive director of the Chemical Institute of Canada, toured the facilities and later met with students and staff during an informal lecture in the Cass Chemistry Centre.

The Chemical Institute of Canada is a professional society which represents the interests of chemists, technicians, teachers, researchers, engineers and the industrial sectors all across Canada. The Chemical Institute of Canada has local sections across the country as well as student chapters at all the universities.

The main topic of the lecture was about the issues facing scientists and professional organisms and the increasing role that they must take in the future to resolve such problems as nuclear wastes, acid rain, environmental quality and the decline of energy resources. Dr. Renzoni pointed out the necessity, on a world basis, for nuclear power and pointed out the grave problems encountered as a result of burning fossil fuels containing sulfur. While not underestimating the difficulties in handling and disposing nuclear waste, he pointed out that acid rain, which is a by-product of sulfur oxidation, is also causing significant difficulties. Dr. Renzoni is pressing the scientific community to meet the challenge the areas of both nuclear and fossil fuels to protect the environment from future deterioration.

In summary, I found both talks very interesting and informative and see the future of Chemistry and of the Chemical Institute of Canada to be not only a challenging one but also a most rewarding one.
