THE NEWSPAPERWORLD

SOME OF THE INTERESTING CURIOSITIES FOUND THEREIN.

The Number of Newspapers in the World—The Oldest Journal is the Pekin Gazette—The Beggars' Journal is One of the Most Curious.

There are 4,965 daily newspapers published throughout the world, of which no fewer than 1,753, or more than a third, are issued in the United States. That country is, in fact, more plentifully supplied with newspapers than any other, there being, besides the dailies 13,404 weeklies, and 605 papers which appear at other intervals without taking into account the monthlies and other magazines and reviews, which, bring up the total to about 23,000, giving employment, is estimated, to 200,000 people. New York State alone has more papers than are published in all the continents of the world south of the equator.

Newspaper enterprise appears, indeed, to flourish all over the New World, at least, to the extent of putting forward great numbers of separate papers. Canada has ninety four dailies, 576 weeklies, and 132 monthlies. Latin-America—including under this convenient term Mexico and Central and South America, where Spanish and Portuguese are spoken—has over 4,500 newspapers of all sorts, 200 of which are printed in other languages than Spanish or Portuguese, almost every foreign tongue being represented.

The newspapers of the British Isles number 2,272, London alone sending out 496 of these. Two monthly magazines and reviews of all kinds published in the British Isles total up to an additional 1,900. The 200 dailies have an average circulation which is nearly five times as great as that of the much larger number issued in the United States.

Paris has more dailies than London, New York, Philadelphia, and Boston combined. The Parisian papers, of which there are 141 altogether, are generally distinguished by having larger circulations than those of all other cities. The largest circulation in the world is that of the Petit Journal, which issues more than a million copies daily.

Germany occupies the second place with regard to the number of daily papers, having 973, besides 2,630 weekly and other papers. The oldest European newspaper still published is the Post Zeitung, of Frankfort, which dates from 1616.

The oldest newspaper in the world is the Pekin Gazette, which has been regularly published since A. D. 911. It has now three issues daily (not merely editions), with a circulation of 10,000. The contents are simply official information, Imperial decrees, and the like, which are communicated to the publisher by the functionaries of the Imperial Palace. The official documents are drawn up with great care, and are only published after such careful revision that they do not appear until two or three days after the publisher has received them. However, he has time to publish an unofficial edition, and also a manuscript edition, which is the first edition, and appears two days before the official. There are six editors, so that there is an ample reserve in case of absence of any of them for Government reasons. That this is not a needless precaution, in view of the strict watch kept on the paper, may be understood when it is stated that during the 1,000 years or so the paper has been in existence seventeen of its editors have been beheaded.

The Gazette is exactly the same in form to-day as it was a thousand years ago. It is 4 in. wide by 10 in. long and each issue consists of about eighteen leaves of soft, thin paper, with ragged edges, printed on one side in Chinese characters, the whole inclosed in a thin yellow cover, and lightly stitched. It is sold on the streets of Pekin by news men and boys.

But though China can boast of this ancient newspaper, it otherwise makes a poor show in the Journalistic world. For all its 400,000,000 inhabitants it has only twenty-four newspapers, ten of which are daily, and fourteen appear at longer intervals. Only eleven are printed in Chinese, one is printed in French, the rest being English.

Japan presents a striking contrast, having 92 dailies and 175 other periodicals. Nearer home, even the little island of Iceland, with some 70,000 inhabitants, has the same number of newspapers as the great empire of China.

The newspapers of India are published in many languages, and it is said that those in the native tongues are more widely circulated and read in proportion to the number of copies printed, than is the case any where else in the world. A single copy will serve a whole village, and will pass from hand to hand until it actually falls to pieces.

Persia has six newspapers, all in the native language except one in Syriac. Persian newspapers are not printed from type. When the reading matter is ready it is passed to a scribe, who makes a clean copy. From this a beautifully written, fine copy is made by a handwriting expert, and this is finally exactly reproduced by lithography.

Borneo has the smallest regular published newspaper in the world—the Sarawak Gazette, printed in English, and first issued in 1807.

All over the world some fifty-nine languages are represented by newspapers. Many are printed in two or three languages, English in such cases usually being one. The newspapers of Austria show a greater variety in this respect than those of any other country, including in the list German, Italian, French, Magyar, or Hungarian, Greek, Latin, Polish, Servina, Slayic and Hebrew. The most remarkable paper in Austria, and probably in the world as regards languages, is the Acta Comparationis Leitraruur Universitatum, a semi-monthly review of comparative literature, which has contributors in every part of the world whose articles are all printed in their native tongues.

The United States have also a considerable variety of languages. Among other foreign tongues, one paper is printed in Magyar and one in Armenian. In south America there are papers published in various native languages, notably in the Guarani of Paraguay. The Zulus, even, had some years ago a paper in their own dialect published in South Africa, but it has now ceased to appear.

The newspaper world offers many curiosities in the way of names. The longest newspaper in existence is that of a Greenland sheet, which rejoices in the euphonious designation of Arrangaglioto Natinginavuik Sysaramunas Seuik. Curious also is the conjunction of names which obtains in the town of Tombstone, Arizona. The leading paper is the Epitaph, which is edited by an Englishman named Coffin, and published by a man named Sexton. The publisher declines advertisements of undertakers, but appropriately inserts death notices gratis.

The most northern newspaper is the Nordslap, published at Hammerstein. The editor and his staff work in a small turf-roofed wooden house. News comes by mailboat, and the Hammersteiners are made aware of the world's events generally eight days late; and as the paper is a weekly, its news is often a fortnight old. The subscribers are kept still further behind, as many have their copies delivered by boat, unless they fetch them, which they sometimes do, paying for them in herrings or other fish.

A peculiar example of newspaper enterprise under difficulties is offered by the Rhodesia Chronicle and Advertiser, a Mashonaland paper, which is a foolscap sheet of sixteen pages, not printed in type, but written by hand, and duplicated by an office stylograph process. Paper being sometimes scarce in Mashonaland, blue-ruled essay paper is used in case of need.

The most curious of all class journals is surely the Beggar's Journal of Paris, which is published daily, and gives its subscribers a complete lists of baptisms, weddings and funerals to take place the same day, which may be assumed to afford a good "pitch." Begging-letter writers are provided for by a special section, which gives the arrivals and departures of persons of known charitable tendencies.

"A Social Vision."

This book of Chas S. Daniels is an attempt to forecast the future of society, to give us the logical results of the present condition of things and to show that by and by human nature will wake out of its sleep and do something quite worthy of itself.

For instance, and we choose at random, here is a picture of a live church, not the dogmatic church of to-day, but the church which recognizes its duty to the world. The young pastor has just been called to his charge and feels that he has a burden to carry. He has a long talk with his bishop, who suggests several innovations. Here is a bit of conversation:

"That is a fine old church," said the Bishop, "and you ought to feel happy with such opportunities."

"Yes, but there is nobody in it."

"There are plenty in the lanes around, I warrant you, and we must seek them out and compel them to come in. How many will your church hold?"

"Eight hundred."

"How many are there when your force is strongest?"

"About two hundred."

"Then there is a waste of space for six hundred; or three-fourths is wasted."

He then suggests that the audience room be divided and made into offices; that business men occupy them, who will hold various kinds of meetings in them during the evening and read good books to boys who can be gathered. It is to be a working church, with a social science department and a kindergarten, and all sorts of attractive things to make the outside community interested in it.

You can tell what a load of hay is from a handful of it, and you can tell what the book is from this simple extract.

"The Practical Man."

Of all stupid persons none is more exasperating than the individual who takes every opportunity to proclaim himself "a practical man." To be practical with him means to gauge all actions by their results, and that results should always be to the immediate advantage of the actor. Considering that a superabundance of ideas hinders, rather than helps a man in making up his mind how to act, he regards with an air of superiority verging on pity the intellectual man with a speculative turn of mind. His view of life usually may be summarized by the adage "Charity begins at home" with the additional inference that it also ends there.

Because such a man's rule of action is narrow, and therefore definite, it is hardly safe to infer that he is necessarily practical. Probably more men have made fools of themselves by acting without thinking than by thinking without acting.

The really practical man is one who "reduces his theories to actual use," not the man who has no theories to reduce.

He who guides all his actions by a few isolated facts is less wise than the man whose rule of conduct however broad, is subservient to well known laws. For a man's material welfare and happiness, whether he likes it or not, must necessarily be bound up with that of his neighbors, his fellow-citizens and his countrymen. Therefore to regard all great social reform as having nothing to do with his own personal interest shows extreme ignorance and shortsightedness. No class of society can suffer without at sometime interfering with the welfare of the others; and "vice versa." The amelioration of one class advances the good of the whole body.

The Great Point in a Hat.

The great point in a hat nowadays, writes Cousin Madge in London Truth, is the character of the curve. If we suppose a family of some nine or ten sisters, with a certain similarity of outline, we shall yet find that no two of them look their best in exactly the same hat. What, then, must it be with the world of girlhood at large? It is absolutely safe to say that there never was yet any hat worn by sisters in which one was not, to a certain extent, sacrificed to the other. Take, for instance, the large picture hat of soft and flexible fine black chip, with its multitude of exquisite feathers for trimming, and its one blush rose at the back with another companion bud resting on the hair under the curve at the left side. It might be imagined that such a headgear as this would make any girl look her loveliest, but when one comes to try it on, it is found that a certain amount of alteration in the very important point of curve will be necessary in most cases.

A Bug Six Inches Long.

The Hercules beetle (Dynastes Hercules) is one of the largest, if not really the largest, known species of the Cleoptera of beetle family. They are not found in the United States proper, but I understand that a fine specimen is occasionally picked up on the islands off the coast of Florida and in the West Indies. I have two dried specimens of Dynastes, one of which is 6½ inches in length, measuring from the tip of his upper mandible or "horn" to the end of his body. The head of the "varmint" is jet black, and the upper mandible or pincher is notched and covered with stiff, golden colored bristles. The under mandible is perhaps an inch shorter than the upper, and the two form a pair of nippers that would cause the stag beetle or common June bug to die with envy.

Noiseless Walking-Sticks.

When carrying a walking-stick I have always disliked the harsh grating sound made by the ferule when touching the pavement.

This could easily be remedied by having a piece of rubber in place of the ferule, and I feel sure that the "noiseless walking-stick" would become a boon to all who used it.

"Gentlemen:—I feel that I cannot say enough in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For five years I have been troubled with scrofula in my neck and throat. Several kinds of medicines which I tried did not do me any good, and when I commenced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla there were large bunches on my neck so sore that I could not bear the slightest touch. When I had taken one bottle of this medicine, the soreness had gone, and before I had finished the second the bunches had entirely disappeared." BLANCHE ATWOOD, Sangerville, Maine.
