MARY HAWORTH

Girl In Trouble Requires Financial Assistance

Dear Mary Haworth: In general you are a brilliant counsellor. But I deplore your too-too objective attitude towards the file clerk who asks help, after having been fired by her married seducer.

Are you by implication condoning the infamous lechery of the two-legged louse who wronged her? For every fallen woman, there are a hundred fallen men.

Instead of steering her blandly to the Florence Crittenton Homes Association or the Salvation Army Service for Unmarried Mothers, why didn't you tell her to consult a first-rate lawyer or write to the state's attorney, or the prosecuting attorney in that town?

She needs immediate medical care at this time, yes; but how about financial help for the next 18 to 21 years, in support of the child? Why not counsel in terms of her long-range needs, not for the present only?

If the young lady will write to: Angel of Mercy Charity, co the director, Box 54, Dayton, Ky., we will try to provide her with some baby clothes, help her find a job, etc.

Meanwhile tell her to get in touch with the president of the company where she was employed, to disclose the name of the department boss who treats his file clerks as harem inmates. Yours sincerely, Rev. J.H.

Dear J.H.: You use very strong language for a clergyman. I have screened out some of the uglier words, while still retaining your precise meaning, I think.

May I refer you to the epistle of St. Jude, 9th verse, to wit: "When Michael the archangel, disputing with the devil, contended about the body of Moses, he (the archangel) durst not bring against him (self) the judgment of railing speech, but said: 'The Lord command thee'."

Now, as to why I directed the unhappy girl to the Crittenton or Salvation Army services for unmarried mothers, it is because these agencies are prepared to give her optimum help in a face-saving arrangement for her. They are equipped to provide (or put her in touch with) whatever specialist counsel her needs require, including legal counsel if such is indicated.

Were she to act blindly on your well meant but nearsighted suggestions—to consult a lawyer, or write to the state's attorney or to the district attorney in the city where she was employed; or to report the seducer to his employer—she would be on the defensive, immediately, in respect to the skeptical question: Was she a victim of criminal assault? Or was she a conspirator in immoral behavior? At 18, has she attended the so-called age of consent? In some jurisdictions, she has.

Thus, rather than precipitate a storm of casual cynical public assessment of her misfortune, which follows when a girl takes trouble of this sort to court, it seems better for her to get confidential, compassionate expert guidance and support, in making present and long-range plans for herself and her child—M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: As secretaries, we protest the slanderous statements about secretarial work made by the pregnant unmarried 18-year-old file clerk, recently seduced and discarded by her married boss.

She says "I am through with the secretarial field, as I am not cut out for that kind of life, even though the pay is good."

If she was old enough to have cocktails and dinner with her married boss, she was old enough to know that such after-hours behavior isn't part of the workaday job.

There may be exceptions to the rule, as in her case; but most secretaries perform only their secretarial chores and have more sense than to get mixed up with their employers.

We notice you didn't say anything in defense of secretaries. The fact is, her trouble didn't stem from her field of work; instead, it stems from her character. Sincerely yours, SECRETARIES

Dear Secretaries: Very likely the girl felt so inadequate as a person and as an employee in her first job that she was easy prey for the man's campaign. Likely, also, he makes a point of hiring girls of her type to be victimized.— M.H.

Korea's Shocking Need Told In Letter From USC Director

The following is an excerpt from a circular letter sent from Korea by Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova, executive director of the Unitarian Service committee.

"One evening I joined Colonel George E. Engel of the Seoul Salvation Army on their daily kitchen run, and my high respect for that down-to-earth hardworking agency rose even higher. . .Every night, except Sundays, Salvation Army volunteers in two jeep station-wagons carry hot, nourishing food to about 200 people each; along the drafty Han River to relocated refugees; to a group of old, homeless gentlemen whom we found huddled together in a kind of summer pavilion in the middle of a park, and not far away, in one section of an enormous tent, in the very centre of the capital behind a newly - constructed business block, there were 35 ragpickers waiting like shadows at candlelight for our arrival. Those whom the police find without abode after 11 p. m., roaming the streets, are also taken to that same tent to protect them from freezing to death.

"This is actually how this soup kitchen program began, Colonel Engel explained to me, as we bounded on icy roads towards our next port of call; three years ago, three people had been found frozen after a very cold night, and the Salvation Army had decided that something had to be done right away. They began distributing hot meat soup after midnight under the Han River Bridge and all along the waterbanks to those living in the open, exposed to wind, snow and drafts, without protection.

"Beyond the outskirts of Seoul, in one of the newest resettlement areas, we were welcomed by a shivering group of men and women, anxiously waiting for their first and only warm meal of the day. We also looked at some of the newly - made houses, crudely built with mud bricks, canvas and straw, not ready yet, the wind blowing through empty window holes in all directions.

"I wholeheartedly agreed with my companion when, in parting, he said, "I am sure there are folks back home who would be glad of the opportunity to help out, if only they knew. . .but how to reach them?"

"Yes, this is my problem. How does someone like myself interpret this shocking need in Canada.

"What is the solution? Political stability first of all; unification of the new divided country; export markets for Korean goods on a much larger scale than is the case today, but above all, leadership that will inspire confidence and rally the entire country in an all-out effort, to defeat present-day despondence and hopelessness.

"There have been all to many people from far and near who have served in Korea, advocating their own philosophies, doctrines and approaches, promising heaven on earth, if followed. Many of these have been tried out, but unsuccessfully, alas, because none was truly adapted to Korean needs. What the country yearns for is sound, experienced leadership from within, from among its own young, educated ranks.

"But I am afraid that this country's tribulations are far from over, and until better days will dawn for the "Land of the Morning Calm," our Unitarian Service Committee must do its utmost to help Korea's suffering children, and adults too."

ELLEN'S DIARY

Night Is Poetic Wonder And Sky Eternal Poem

"We may get a nice March throughout" a visitor of this afternoon remarked. James looked off to the fields coming up rosily then to the sunset-time, to the blue sky resting lightly on the valley's rim.

"We may" he nodded. "Though" he added "it did come in like a lamb!"

"And that could mean it will go out like a lion."

"It's apt to" James said.

"Well, at any rate it's been a great winter."

"Couldn't have been better" James agreed. "Farmers had no excuse this time for not getting on with their work."

"Yes. In the woods..or anywhere. Not too many days when potatoes couldn't be moved."

"Not too many" James said. There was a silence.

"How is the feed-situation with you?" the visitor inquired.

"I believe we'll have plenty to tide us over to the grass" James said.

"But they do get away with a power of it these times! Yes, the hay and grain go!"

"Any trouble with it —any sickness?"

"Not so far" James replied. "No, the cattle have been well. But" he grinned "I guess I should 'touch wood'. I hear there has been some sickness blamed on the poor quality of the hay."

And all the time, the sunbeams were homing to the west where above the tree-crowned slope there, the sky was being patterned with the hues of the sunset, the colors now distinct and again intermingled, blended beautifully as might a housewife blend with an artistic eye the varied chosen shades in the rug she makes.

"The sky" George Matthew Adams, speaking of poetry said "is an eternal poem. The night is filled with poetic wonder. Each roadside is a subject for a Keats or a Burns. Unconsciously we live upon the poetry of beauty, that is so free about us... All beauty is poetry. Our very minds are nourished by happiness, through a love of beauty and its appreciation, quite as truly as our bodies are nourished by food. Each nourishment is essential... The usual and the most commonplace, as a rule, hides the greatest poetry! Nature is our greatest book of poetry, and God our greatest poet."

It is so true that:

"We do not live by bread alone
—ah no,
We live by love and peace and
fire-glow,
By gentle thoughts, and small
needs kindly done,
By toil and weariness..laughter
and fun,
By music's magic touch, and
love's dear hand,
And childish feet, that walk in wonderland.

We live by all the beauty of the world,
Smoke from a supper fire, softly curled,
Above the snowy rooftops of the town;
By a tall lady in a satin gown,
With pearls twined in the meshes of her hair;
We live by faith, and solitude,
and prayer."

Until Monday— Diary — Good-night.....

Survey Party In Labrador Is Forced To Change Course

By JOHN E. BIRD

OTTAWA (CP) — Howling blizzards, extreme cold and impassable canyons have forced a hardy team of federal surveyorys to change course on a 300-mile trek across the frozen wastes of Labrador.

The survey party planned originally to travel due north for a distance of 100 miles from the northern tip of Michikamau Lake, about 100 miles east of Shefferville, Que. From this point the surveyors were to move 200 miles east to Hopedale on Labrador's northern coast.

William MacLellan, 37-year-old head of the party from the mapping branch of the technical surveys department, said in a report received this week by the branch that the selected route east to Hopedale is impassable due to deep canyons filled with rushing water despite sub-zero temperatures.

Mr. MacLellan said aerial reconnaissance by a supply plane from Shefferville has resulted in the party moving farther north to the Notakwanon River, which flows east to the Labrador sea. The surveyors who started their trek in mid-January will follow this river and will complete their mission about 48 mles north of Hopedale late in March.

LATEST HARDSHIP

The change in course is the latest hardship suffered by the survey party which is recording elevations in the barren area for use later with aerial photographs in the production of resources maps of this part of Canada.

Mr. MacLellan said in a report last month that the party had been stalled by temperatures ranging from 40 to 50 degrees below zero, winds of 25 eight to 10 feet deep.

In his latest report to the branch, he says there has been no improvement in weather conditions. During one 14-day period it snowed steadily for 12 days with the wind blowing constantly, creating drifts which bogged down the motorized toboggans.

The party is being supplied once every 10 days by a plane from Shefferville. However, while it is travelling across one 30-mile stretch pitted with deep canyons it will be necessary to supply the surveyors by air drops.
