

Finance Firms And Salesmen Face Criticism In Commons

OTTAWA (CP)—Finance companies and high-pressure travel salesmen came under attack from the four corners of the Commons, but there was little agreement on how the government should help the "little guy" with big debts. Attention quickly focused on the salesmen who are loan companies as the House debated a bill by David Orlikow (NDP—Winnipeg North) to allow a return on low wage-earners to use bankruptcy machinery now available to businessmen.

Seven speakers from Conservative, Liberal and Social Credit ranks expressed agreement with the principle of the NDP member's bill, but raised many objections to its provisions. The bill was "talked out" in the hour devoted to MP's bills and is not likely to come up again this session.

Gilles Giguere (SC—La Pointe) said finance companies are "exploiting the little guy" by charging rates of interest ranging up to 32 per cent. He himself had been forced to pay 32 per cent in interest on a loan to buy a car.

AWAIT OWN BILL
Four Conservative MPs praised the objective of the Orlikow bill but said they preferred to wait for a government bill now before the Senate.

The government bill introduced in the upper chamber Oct. 2, would amend the Bankruptcy Act to allow individuals to obtain a court order for the priority payment of debts of less than $1,000.

(Deshabilles de Façon Magistrale) to finance companies," he said.

Dr. Berker, an international figure in the fields of electronics, geophysics and space science, said the current world science body, the International Council of Scientific Unions, has proven ineffective. It had failed to take positive
