FOUL PLAY.

By Charles Reade.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

HELEN'S act was strange, and demands a word of explanation. If she had thought the steamboat was a strange vessel, she would have lighted the bonfire; if she had known her father was on board, she would have lighted it now. But Hazel, whose every word now was gospel, had said it was Arthur Wardlaw in that boat, searching for her.

Still, so strong is the impulse in all civilized beings to get back to civilization, that she went up the hill as honestly intending to light the bonfire as Hazel intended it to be lighted. But, as she went, her courage cooled, and her feet began to go slowly, as her mind ran swiftly forward to consequence upon consequence. To light that bonfire was to bring Arthur Wardlaw down upon herself and Hazel living alone and on intimate terms. Arthur would come and claim her to his face. Could she disallow his claim? Gratitude would now be on his side as well as good faith. What a shock to Arthur! What torture for Hazel! Torture that he foresaw, or why the face of anguish, that dragged even now at her heart strings? And then it could end only in one way; she and Hazel would leave the Island in Arthur's ship. What a voyage for all three! She stood transfixed by shame; her whole body blushed at what she saw coming. Then once more Hazel's face rose before her; poor crippled Hazel! her hero and her patient. She sat down and sighed, and could no more light the fire than she could have put it out if another had lighted it.

She was a girl that could show you at times she had a father as well as a mother; but that evening she was all woman.

They met no more that night.

In the morning his face was haggard, and showed a mental struggle; but hers placid and quietly beaming for the very reason that she had made a great sacrifice. She was one of that sort.

And this difference between them was a foretaste.

His tender conscience pricked him sore.
To see her sit beaming there, when if he had done his own duty with his own hands she would be on her way to England! Yet his remorse was dumb; for, if he gave it vent, then he must seem ungrateful to her for her sacrifice.

She saw his deep and silent compunction, approved it secretly, said nothing but smiled, and beamed, and soothed. He could not resist this; and wild thrills of joy and hope passed through him, visions of unbroken bliss far from the world.

But this sweet delirium was followed by magnitudes of another kind. And here she was at fault. What could they be?

It was the voice of conscience telling him that he was really winning her love, once inaccessible; and, if so, was bound to tell her his whole story, and let her judge between him and the world, before she made any more sacrifices for him. But it is hard to stop great happiness; harder to stop it and run it. Every night, as he lay alone, he said, "To-morrow I will tell her all, and make her the judge." But in the morning her bright face crushed his purpose by the fear of clouding it. His limbs got strong and his heart got weak; and they used to take walks, and her head came near to his shoulder; and the path of duty began to be set thicker than ever with thorns; and the path of love with primroses. One day she made him sit to her for her portrait; and under cover of artistic enthusiasm, told him his beard was godlike, and nothing in the world could equal it for beauty. She never saw but one at all like it, poor Mr. Seaton's; but even that was very inferior to his; and then she dismissed the sinner: "Poor thing," said she, "you are pale and tired." And she began to use ornaments; took her bracelets out of her bag, and picked pearls out of her walls, and made a coronet, under which her eyes flashed at night with superlative beauty—conscious beauty brightened by the sense of being admired and looked at by the eye she desired to please.

She revered him. He had improved her character, and she knew it, and often told him so. "Call me Hazelia," she said; "make me liker you, still."

One day, he came suddenly through the jungle, and found her reading her prayer-book.

He took it from her, not meaning to be rude, neither, but inquisitive.

It was open at the marriage-service, and her cheeks were dyed scarlet.

His heart panted. He was a clergyman; he could read that service over them both.

Would it be a marriage?

Not in England; but in some countries it would. Why not in this? This was not England.

He looked up. Her head was averted; she was downright distressed.

He was sorry to have made her blush; so he took her hand and kissed it tenderly, so tenderly that his heart seemed to go into his lips. She thrilled under it, and her white brow sank upon his shoulder.

The sky was a vault of purple with a flaming topaz in the center; the sea a heavenly blue; the warm air breathed heavenly odors; flaming macaws wheeled overhead; humming-birds, more gorgeous than any flower, buzzed around their heads, and amazed the eye with delight, then cooled it with the deep green of the jungle into which they dived.

It was a Paradise with the sun shining down on it, and the ocean smiling up, and the air impregnated with love. Here they were both content now to spend the reminder of their days—

"The world forgetting; by the world forgot."

CURRENT NOTES.

Archbishop Dennis's toast was generous and sufficiently comprehensive:— Here's health to all that love us;
Here's health to all that love us;
Here's health to all those that love them That love those that love them That love us.

Out of 704 blast furnaces in the United States 416 were out of blast on Jan. 1, 1884.
Of the bituminous furnaces fifty-five per cent. of the anthracite fifty-two per cent., and of the charcoal furnaces sixty-eight per cent. were out of blast. This represents an enormous number of men out of work.

A Chicago barber says:—"The edge of a razor is a very delicate thing. Heat and cold affect it. Under a strong magnifying glass the edge of a razor which has been exposed to the cold would seem like a saw.
Dipping into hot water throws the little particles back into place and makes the edge smooth. A sudden change in the weather always affects the razors in a barber shop and the tempers of the laborers."

Turner has been fined thirty shillings for saturnating a cat with oil and setting it on fire. Silvester has been condemned to one month's imprisonment with hard labor for throwing a dog into a boiler. And are we to understand it is a greater crime to torture a dog than a cat? The more I look into the doings of the Great Unpaid, the more convinced am I that many Justices of the Peace have justice to learn the meaning of the word "justice."—London Truth.

Thackeray caricatured Bulwer mercilessly, and with consummate dexterity. A Bon Gautier ballad depicted him as "howling melancholy homage to the moon." Mr.
Tennyson described him as a "band-box," and as "the padded man that wears the stays," and asked him, in verse that deserves to live:

What profits it to understand The merits of a spotless shirt, The dapper foot, the little hand, If half the little soul be dirt?

The trade in frozen meat from the Australian colonies of England had advanced within three years to a most important condition. In 1880 only 400 carcasses were imported, while in 1883 no fewer than 193,644 were landed in England, 62,733 from Australia, and 129,732 from New-Zealand. Twenty-one cargoes arrived in a perfectly satisfactory condition, seven were not quite so good, and three were bad.
Colonial mutton is in greater demand than colonial beef.

A clergyman in Durham, England, some short time since taught an old man in his parish how to read, and found him an apt pupil. After his lessons were finished he was not able to call for some time, and when he did only found the wife at home.
"How is John?" said he. "How does he get on with his reading?" "Oh, nicely, sir." "Ah, I suppose he'll read his Bible very comfortably now?" "Bible, sir!
Bless you, he is out of the Bible and into the newspapers long ago."

There was a company of men engaged in a little game of cards in a friend's parlor one night. It grew late, and fears were expressed by the party that they were trespassing upon the kindness of the mistress of the house, who, by the way, was not present. "Not at all, gentlemen, not at all. Play as long as you please. I am Czar here," said the master of the mansion.
"Yes, gentlemen, play as long as you please," said a silvery voice—and all rose immediately as the mistress of the house stood before them—"but as it is nearly one o'clock the Czar is going to bed." He went.

Marquis Tseng, the accomplished Chinaman, writes that Europe, once inhabited by wild tribes, in all probability derived its literature and political systems from Asia, whence they gradually spread westward; and this he considers an explanation of the resemblance between European habits and ways and those of China in olden times. For example, in the west articles of household use are invariably carved and engraved with taste and neatness, the idea being derived from the inscriptions found upon goblets, cups, and like utensils of antique date in China.

The following story from the land of office holders indicates that the time to meet an Ohio man is when he has battled with the favorite beverage of his state:— Nicholas Longworth, ex-judge of the Ohio supreme court, the only son of the late Joseph Longworth, by whose will he has just come into property in Cincinnati worth $10,000,000, was one of the principals yesterday in a little episode which is the talk of the clubs. Judge Longworth, in a slightly convivial mood, stepped into the studio of Matt Morgan, the well-known artist, to meet some friends. He wore a magnificent sealskin overcoat and cap of the same material, for which he recently paid $450.
Forney, the artist, was in the studio at the time. The two men stood in the middle of the room engaged in conversation, while Matt Morgan, from his desk in a corner, drew a rapid sketch of Judge Longworth, bringing out the sealskin overcoat and cap in a very graphic manner. Before leaving the studio the sketch was shown to Longworth by one of his friends. The likeness was a striking one, and Judge Longworth was delighted with it. He knew at once that it was the work of Morgan, and, hastily removing the overcoat, he seized the artist by the arm, lifted him to his feet, and buttoned the rich garment about his shoulders. Then removing his cap, he slapped it on Morgan's head, with the remark: "Here Matt, any one who can draw like that takes the goods." Morgan protested, but it was no use, and Judge Longworth left him, declaring that he would never speak to him again if he did not keep the overcoat and cap. He then looked around the room and finding an old straw hat covered with paint, he placed that on his head and left for home.—
