TEACHERS' SALARIES — To emphasize that they were at last "in the march of economic progress" Hon. Keir Clark told Island teachers Tuesday that, in addition to one-half million dollars paid by the local school districts, they would probably receive in excess of $1,000,000 in "salaries and supplements at Government level." This statement was not clear in the original report of the speech delivered by the Minister at the first session of the teachers' annual convention.

National Gallery Should Give Impression Of Activity

By CAROLYN WILLET
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — A dynamic young graphic artist says the National Gallery should impress people with "a feeling of lively activity."

Paul Arthur, who regards himself as a businessman, personifies what he preaches. The 32-year-old artist, born in England but brought up in Toronto, is the gallery's adviser on publications.

He works in a small, publication-crammed office on the gallery's fourth floor. He is armed with pencils, scissors, type rules and enough ideas to startle a muse.

"SILENT SALESMEN" — "Everything the gallery publishes, from memos to major publications, should be a silent salesman," he said in an interview.

With a wave at gallery sale items—including greeting cards, reproductions and catalogues—he says they all should be perfect examples of graphic art, attractive, interesting and scholarly.

Appointed to the advisory job in 1956, Mr. Arthur was "lured back" from a five-year stint with Graphis, the leading Swiss international magazine on graphic arts, says gallery director Alan Jarvis. "I'm terribly glad I did come back," says Mr. Arthur.

Already there's a new look in gallery publications, from attractive, illustrated annual reports and fast-selling exhibition catalogues, to letterheads, pamphlets and advertisements.

The first of a four-volume, finely-illustrated series on the gallery's collection, published by University of Toronto Press, went on sale this year.

DESIGN ESSENTIAL — Whether it's a small pamphlet or a major publication, Mr. Arthur regards a publication's layout as "architecture."

A University of Toronto arts graduate and son of Eric Arthur, U. of T. professor of architecture, he finds a strong parallel between the designer and the craftsman who builds — whether with print and paper or bricks and mortar.

Intent on bringing people to Canada's galleries and taking the galleries to people, he now is working on a color album of Canadian art for school children and is promoting more extensive use of reproductions from Canadian galleries for greeting cards and engagement calendars.

Additional advisory work ranges from stamp designs and the external affairs department—he's working on the department's new edition of Canada From Sea to Sea — to Carleton University publications.

He's also art director and production manager of Canadian Art, an exclusively Canadian quarterly magazine which has some 6,000 subscribers. It is not a gallery publication.
