Remedy for the Horn Fly.

O B WADMAN, of Crapaud, writes: "After trying many experiments this summer on my own cow, I have at last discovered a cheap and substantial remedy. Cod oil, petroleum, coal oil, etc, should not be used, as they are injurious to the cattle, and I am persuaded that farmers who have used those remedies will, after examination, find a great many sores." He will supply the remedy for 40 cts per gallon which will be sufficient quantity for twenty cows. One application will last for ten or twelve days. THE DOCTOR'S MISTAKE.

Old Benjamin Westlake was a very eccentric old man. He was wealthy, but lived unostentatiously. He had never been married, and was not known to have any relative in the world save a nephew, who lived on a farm some five or six miles away. About five years ago the old man and his nephew, Allan Eastly, had quarreled, since which there had grown up a silent estrangement which had never been bridged over. Allan was of a proud nature, never given to toadying, and he consequently determined to carve out his own fortune independently of dead men's shoes.

For a time things went tolerably well, but bye-and-bye disaster followed disaster, and the young farmer was at length compelled to face the fact that, in spite of his resolute energy, he was losing ground year by year. Again and again Hilda, his dutiful wife, implored him, for the sake of their young children, to pocket his pride and endeavor to enlist the sympathy and help of his Uncle Benjamin.

"I would sooner perish," said Allan, "and see the children suffer slow starvation than appeal to him. I hate him, and were I to go near him I would be tempted to strangle or poison him."

Things did not improve on the farm, and, to stave off an immediate and fearful catastrophe, Allan at length had recourse to a firm of money-lenders. The result of these negotiations filled the young farmer over his difficulties for a time, but the reckoning day loomed on the horizon, and peace of mind thenceforth became an unknown element in Allan Eastly's life. He became moody and misanthropical, treated his wife with harshness and irritability whenever she attempted advice, and finally made sorrow worse by endeavoring to drown it in alcohol. He became a frequent visitor at the Black Bull, a licensed house in the adjoining village. The neighboring farmers who "used" the snuggery of this hotel were not slow in realizing the desperate financial condition of their confrere, and, on several occasions, Allan, instead of disguising his position, openly avowed that he "was on his last legs."

But a few days afterwards there came a steadying point in Allan Eastly's life. After repeated demands, the money-lenders became importunate, and finally swooped down upon the farmstead, and placed the customary men in possession. Just at this time his youngest child was taken seriously ill. Allan doted on his little four-year-old, and his cup of sorrow was consequently filled to the brim. Seated by the little bed, the young farmer gazed wistfully into the sleeping face of his child.

Oh, that he could raise the money! He would do anything could he but retrieve—— Stay, would he? It was possible that a reconciliation might be effected between his uncle and himself, if he would but dissipate that proud, revengeful spirit which seemed to have taken such complete possession of him. Allan paused, wavered, looked once more at the hot, restless little head, now tossing wearily upon the pillow, and finally, covering his face with his hands, burst into tears, and determined to visit his uncle the next day.

Several matters of importance connected with the farm detained him in the morning. He seemed moody, and disinclined for conversation. His wife watched him curiously, and noted with dismay the peculiar look which sat upon his face. He never communicated his determination to her. So frequently had he exhibited anger on this very topic, that he could not now bring himself to mention it. He saw the look of misgiving which tenanted her face, and it annoyed him and added to the wild, haggard expression which sat upon his. He saddled his horse in silence, mounted and rode away, only shouting back to Hilda that he would be back within an hour. In ten minutes he was at the market town, dismounted from his horse and entered a chemist's shop. His purchase was a significant one, consisting of a pound of "white arsenic." He had no difficulty in procuring it. His statement that he required it for wheat-dressing, and the fact that he was a farmer were quite sufficient to justify Mr. Bolus in handing the dangerous commodity over. Punctual to the time he had stated, Allan rode up to his house, partook of a hasty meal, and then set out on foot for his uncle's residence.

Allan Eastly was not aware that Benjamin Westlake had been seized with sudden illness some few days previously, but such was the case. The old man was ill in bed. Allan felt particularly gloomy as he trudged on his way, and frequently lapsed into abstraction, wondering what would be the result of his mission. Whilst pondering this problem in his mind he was accosted by a stylishly-dressed, but evidently a bombastic man of about his own age.

"I've been told that you're Allan Eastly,' said the stranger, "and I should imagine that you're on your way to visit old Benjamin. It's no good, though; you're out of it. I'm his son, you know—at least, you don't know, because you're not aware that the old 'un has ever been married. But he has—married in Australia; and I'm the only outcome of it. Mr. mother's dead. I've been up to the old man, and he's satisfied with my papers. What's more, he's going to alter his will this very night. I'm off for the lawyer now. You were in it before—left everything. But after to-night, you'll be out of it, see? I only hope I won't have to wait long before I handle the pieces. Ta, ta!" and the man twirled his cane and walked away.

The young farmer was so astonished at what he had heard that he was unable to reply to this strange visitor. For a moment he paused, as if inclined to return, but, with a settled hard look on his face, he quickened his steps in the direction of his uncle's house. Night was beginning to fall as he entered. He was speedily ushered into old Westlake's room, and the old man motioned to the nurse to retire. This woman had been his housekeeper for many years, and held high hopes that she was mentioned in her master's will. She was quickly aroused into suspicion when Allna Eastly entered, and although she left the room, she lingered outside, with her ear to the key-hole.

"I have heard strange news on my way here," said Allan, addressing his uncle.

again. He lingered outside, walking up and down with his eyes fixed on the ground, started at the least sound from the court, and, when it was announced that the prisoner had been condemned to death, Dr. Marchant had to be assisted to a cab.

The day fixed for the execution rapidly drew near. It wanted but a week to the moment when Allan Eastly would suffer an ignominious death. Dr. Marchant was taken suddenly ill. He was seized with apoplexy whilst sitting in his chair. Assistance was at once sent for, and in the course of a few hours the patient regained consciousness. He was very feeble, however, and it was seen that the flickering remnant of life could not last long. In a weak voice, the doctor asked that a magistrate might be sent for at once. At first this request was attributed to a return of delirium, but the doctor became agitated, pointed to a newspaper containing the report of the recent trial, and reiterated his command as vehemently as he could. A magistrate was sent for, and on his arival Dr. Marchant made the astounding statement that Allan Eastly was innocent of all connection with his uncle's death. The patient's medicine had indeath. The doctor, in personally dispensing his patient's medicine had inadvertently filled up the bottle with a solution of arsenic instead of water. He never discovered his error until after his return from the post mortem and had then been so overcome at his error that he lost all command of himself and dared not face the consequence of his deplorable accident As he pondered over the fact that it meant life-long ruin to him, the contemplation increased his fear to such an extent that he was utterly unable to speak that word which would at once have established the innocence of a much wronged man.

Of course, Allan Eastly was at once liberated. Dr. Marchant died a fortnight afterwards. I was one of the jury who so readily found a verdict of wilful murder against the young farmer. Since that time I have steadfastly set myself against believing that circumstantial evidence, however seemingly conclusive, should ever be considered sufficient justification for the carrying out of the extreme penalty of the law.

MARK IT WELL.

A Development Peculiar to the Present Generation Dangerous and Often Fatal.

As each generation comes and goes it is marked by changes, developments and discoveries unknown to its predecessors. From a physical standpoint one of the most to be dreaded conditions and peculiar for its rapid increase during the present generation, is when the mind labors under the delusion of persecution, continual restlessness, pain in the back and head, twitching of the muscles of the face and hands, furred tongue, breath foul and heavy, nausea and further indications of stomach trouble. There may be delirium, convulsions or sinking spells. Medical authorities apply different names to the conditions that are unintelligible to the average reader. The actual fact is the demoralized and dangerous state of the system is due to the accumulation of "Body Poison" in the blood that should and would be thrown off by the Kidneys if in a healthy condition. In order to restore health, strike at the root of the disease with Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, the only medicine known that will control the changes going on in the Kidneys, enabling them to furnish for the whole system blood free from disease-breeding poison, building up the shattered condition of nerves, and relieving mental depression Price 25c., sold by all dealers. People in Detroit are Interested in a Great Resemblance in Two Cases

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 26.—Much interest has been manifested here over the recovery of Mr. G. H. Kent, of Ottawa, from Bright's disease by using Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy which is now in universal use, and many people have a clear recollection of the similar case which occurred in London, Ontario, not long ago, namely, that of Mr. Wm. Langley, who for sometime was an inmate of Harper's Hospital here and was operated upon without effect by several Detroit physicians. It was owing to this connection with Detroit and the long accounts published in the press that so much interest was taken in the case, and led to such an enormously increased sale of the medicine.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.
