U.S. Arctic Ice Core 10,000-Year Record

By SEYMOUR M. HERSH
WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Army is planning to take a cold look at the past—10,000 years of it.

A team of researchers has reported success in drilling through nearly a mile of the polar ice cap, rich in clues of the world's yesterdays.

To celebrate it, they served reporters at the defence department soft drinks cooled with ice formed 2,000 years ago. The ice was found 1,800 feet under the surface at the army's drilling site in Camp Century on Greenland's upper northwest coast.

The researchers said they estimated the age by measuring layers in samples of the ice which, like tree rings, reflect each season and tells something about it.

The drilling program, started in 1961 by a team from the Army Materiel Command's cold regions research and engineering laboratory, ended July 4 when rock bottom was struck—about 4,562 feet under the surface. The ice there is about 10,000 years old, scientists said.

Officials described the achievement as a victory of sorts for the United States because teams from Canada, France, Sweden, Belgium and the Soviet Union have made ice drillings for years with limited success.

Record Number Have Enrolled

A record number of 730 students has been enrolled at St. Dunstan's University for 1966-67, according to figures released yesterday from the office of SDU registrar Michael Hennessey. This is an increase of more than 25 per cent over last year's official enrollment of 581.

Of this year's total, 309 are first year university students, 189 are in second year, 116 are in third year and a similar number 116 are in their senior year.

These figures also include 45 students in the engineering program, 23 in first year, 15 in second year and seven in third year.

Report Highlights

OTTAWA (CP)—Highlights of Justice Minister Diefenbaker's report to the House of Commons on the Munsinger case were set out in a report by the House of Commons.

The report, which was tabled in the House on Friday, says that the Munsinger case was a "startling" security risk, although no actual breach of security was evident.

John Diefenbaker, then prime minister, did not properly handle the case when it was brought to his attention.

Mr. Sevigny lied to Mr. Diefenbaker in December of 1960 when he claimed to have ended his association with Mrs. Munsinger months earlier, and should properly have resigned or been dismissed from the cabinet.

The relationship between George Hees, then transport and safety trade minister, and Mrs. Munsinger was a casual one, not at all improper in character. But Mr. Hees should have displayed more discretion.

Dave Fulton, then justice minister, should have investigated more fully the security aspects of such an action which would have been improper without the instructions or approval of the prime minister.

Despite his denial, there could be no other conclusion than that Mr. Sevigny and Mrs. Munsinger had for some time indulged in intimate sexual relations.

Prime Minister Pearson's action in asking the RCMP for any reports of impropriety involving MPs was a natural and proper one.

Justice Minister Cardin was justified in his contention that certain aspects of the Munsinger case were worse than the Profumo scandal.

Mr. Fulton's action in reporting promptly to Mr. Diefenbaker when he learned of the Munsinger affair was commendable, but his later direction to the RCMP to be kept informed generally was not sufficient.

It was "startling" that Mr. Diefenbaker did not inform Douglas Harkness, then de-with Mrs. Munsinger "would appear to have been a casual one, not at all improper in character."

MET FOUR TIMES

Mr. Justice Spence suggested that Mr. Hees might have been more prudent and found out more about Mrs. Munsinger, whom he admitted meeting four times.

"There was no security breach, as events turned out there was no security risk. But if the association had continued and intensified, there might have been a security risk."

"The lack of discretion was slight but regrettable."

Mr. Justice Spence supported the allegations of Justice Minister Cardin which led to the inquiry being established. Mr. Cardin had stated his Commons seat on his charges.

Commenting on the report in the House, Mr. Cardin said he is happy with the conclusions. It was regrettable certain persons appeared in a bad light, but the inquiry had been necessary to clean up the political climate of the country.

The judge agreed that two or more ministers in Mr. Diefenbaker's cabinet had been involved with Mrs. Munsinger and that a security risk had existed.

He also supported Mr. Cardin's contention that some aspects of the case were worse than the Profumo scandal in Britain in 1963.

With respect to former justice minister Dave Fulton, who reported the case to Mr. Diefenbaker in December, 1960, he said:

"The relationship between then associate defence minister Pierre Sevigny and Gerda Munsinger in 1959-61 constituted a 'startling' security risk, although no actual breach of security was evident."

Mr. Diefenbaker also should have warned Mr. Hees of the situation but "failed" to do so.

It was regrettable that Mr. Diefenbaker did not see fit to testify at the inquiry.

Mrs. Munsinger was a "self-admitted espionage agent" who had carried out assignments of a minor character in Germany for the Russian intelligence service.

She also had a record as a prostitute, petty thief and smuggler, and "could very easily betray those who trusted her."

J. A. Aitken Passes Away

John A. Aitken, 96, died Sept. 19, 1966, in Charlottesville, Virginia, after a brief illness. He was born Nov. 30, 1867, at Bay Fortune, Prince Edward Island, one of seven children of Helen Wiggins-Townshend and Charles Aitken, and the great-grandson of James Aitken, who emigrated from Galway to the Island in 1775.

He went to Boston, Mass., in 1889 and became a U.S. citizen in 1896. After earning the rating of master plumber, he was chosen in 1911 to supervise the installation of all plumbing during "This reporting, with such promptness, is commendable." But he adds, it was Mr. Fulton's duty to determine himself "or even better" find out from his legal advisers in the department whether any security of fence had been committed.

"I am of the opinion that the Hon Mr. Fulton should not have been content to leave the question... to be determined only from the bare conclusion stated in the RCMP brief."

Mr. Justice Spence said he is certain Mr. Fulton's law officers "would not be content with such a 'partial investigation' as had taken place up to the time the RCMP reported to him without investigating others than Mrs. Munsinger."

Mr. Fulton's general direction to the RCMP that he kept informed "was not sufficient." However, Mr. Fulton could not be criticized for not ordering further investigation.
