ENGLAND'S PERIL.

What Would Happen if the Road to London Were Open.

If the single idea were entertained that the road to London was open, the effect of that idea would be for the hour ruin such as the world has never witnessed. The panic might, we believe would, suspend the whole social organization of the kingdom. All banks would shut their doors. The means of paying wages would be unobtainable, masses of men threatened with starvation would be raging in city streets as the Athenian mob raged, and unless parliament had very trusted leaders its deliberations might only add to the general confusion. London knows instinctively that, if attacked by a triumphant enemy, it can neither be defended nor fed; that, in fact, its only solid protection would be victory in the field, and London, if it got out of hand, would be a pandemonium such as only shells could reduce to order. We English despise foreign nations because their capitals are liable to "excitement," panic, aimless insurrectionary movements, or revolts like that of the commune, but we have no experience which justifies our overweening confidence.

We have no more idea of what London would be under the influence of terror than what the solar system would be if the law of gravitation were suspended. All might be, all would be, put right in time, for the national character is sound. There must be 600,000 men in the island who have been through the military mill, and the supply of varied capacity is unlimited, but the influence of the dark week would be felt all throughout our subsequent history. Just imagine the effect of the telegrams upon India, upon the colonies, upon the whole of the mercantile "plant" scattered over earth—of which the mercantile marine is only a part—accessible to the news. The week would cost us a national debt in money alone, besides its future effect in the destruction of the idea that England is in the world the one inviolable magazine for the storage of universal wealth.—London Spectator.

A Breezy Yarn About a Chimney Which Must Not Be Believed.

Turnkey Tomlinson of the Twenty-eighth district police station spins some marvelous yarns for the benefit of the tenderfoot reporter who visits his precinct in search of news. "Talk about cold air drafts," he remarked one evening, although not a soul had mentioned the subject. "I remember once down in Kentucky I helped to build a big stone chimney. The scaffolding was on the inside, and we all caught severe colds from the draft. When the scaffolding was being taken down, the current of air was so strong that we found it much easier to allow the boards and trestles to scud out the top of the chimney with the current of air as soon as they were detached than to pass them down the chimney to the floor of the house.

"When the chimney was cleared of the scaffolding, the drawing power was terrific. To make a fire was out of the question. Shavings, wood, everything went up the chimney and out at the top. It was necessary to get out of the line of the draft for safety. The table was suddenly seized in the current, a crash of broken legs, and up the chimney it went. Then the churn, the chairs, the cat, which held on for dear life to the carpet with its claws, when, whish! carpe!, cat and all went up the flume. Shortly a darky came in with a thick cord wood stick over his shoulder. The suction grabbed him, but the stick stuck crosswise in the chimney, which gave us time enough to wall her up. Now it is only used as a wind siren to call the hands in the distillery by pulling out a stone at its base and letting the air whistle through it." And the tenderfoot reporter wandered out into the night in a dazed manner.—Philadelphia Record.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Themes Which Men and Women Discourse About on Street Cars.

A certain physician of this city, who never neglects an opportunity to study the traits of the people among whom his business takes him, has been making some observations recently that may serve as a basis for estimating the character of the average modern American.

"I have to travel on street cars a good deal," the physician said in explaining his course of procedure, "and I hear all kinds of people talk. A short time ago I thought I would keep a record of the words most frequently used within my hearing by people of all classes.

"I omit names, profanity and vulgarity, but otherwise this list, which represents one week's street car conversation, is absolutely correct. Here, then, is a summary of what married men talk about:

"Dollars mentioned within my hearing, 407 times; business, 295; money, 206; dollar, 194; stocks, 163; bonds, 152; job, 81; son, 63; daughter, 11; wife, 4; literature, 0; music, 0; art, 0. "Married women: She, 409; party, 326; dress, 324; splendid, 318; dollars, 201; trimming, 187; cards, 151; prize, 151; society, 130; baby, 129; clothes, 84; weather, 62; rich, 60; lovely, 59; perfectly awful, 46; doctor, 43; medicine, 34; music, 6; literature, 0; art, 0.

"Young men, unmarried: Corker, 502; daisy, 467; girl, 416; beaut, 391; fairy, 306; winner, 302; stunner, 284; hummer, 281; dance, 104; party, 87; old man, 88; fight, 79; money, 72; dollars, 50; no good, 42; cigarette, 31; college, 1; literature, 0; music, 0; art, 0.

"Young women, unmarried: Lovely, 509; just perfectly lovely, 491; horrid, 476; gorgeous, 468; fellow, 409; engaged, 387; dress, 371; stunning, 352; love, 296; party, 291; wear, 284; she, 206; opera, 198; ring, 31; mamma, 28; papa, 16; music, 9; mother, 1; picture, 1; poem, 1; art, 1.

"I intend," concluded the doctor, "to pursue this subject further, and may be able to give additional figures that will be interesting."—Cleveland Leader.

The Largest Book.

Professor Max Muller of Oxford, in a recent lecture, called attention to the largest book in the world, the wonderful Kuth Daw. It consists of 729 parts in the shape of white marble plates, covered with inscriptions, each plate built with a temple of brick. It is found near the old priest city of Mandalay, in Burma, and this temple city of more than 700 pagodas virtually makes up this monster book—the religious codex of the Buddhists. It is written in Pali. Rather strange to say, it is not an ancient production, but its preparation was prompted by the Buddhist party of this century. It was erected in 1857 by the command of Mindomin, the second of the last kings of Burma.—Home Journal.

Keep up hope. There are thousands of cases where recovery from Consumption has been complete. Plenty of fresh air and a well-nourished body will check the progress of the disease. Nutritious foods are well in their way, but the best food of all is Cod-liver Oil. When partly digested, as in Scott's Emulsion, it does not disturb the stomach and the body secures the whole benefit of the amount taken. If you want to read more about it let us send you a book.
