Proposed Changes In Benefit Period Discussed

The proposed changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act now before Parliament, whereby the seasonal benefit period for 1957-1958 will be extended to June 28, were briefly explained by the Charlottetown National Employment Office yesterday. The office has staff-training material in line with the new amendments. For several days the procedure to be followed will be closely studied by the office personnel.

The extension will affect seasonal benefit claimants which are active on May 17, at which date under the old legislation, all seasonal benefit claims were to have expired automatically. It will also affect those presently drawing regular benefits whose claims would normally expire after May 17 and under the old legislation would have no further money coming to them. Under the proposed legislation such claimants will be enabled to qualify for seasonal benefits until June 28.

All of the proposed changes affect fishermen, except those claimants whose benefits have already expired. Another class of people will also be favorably affected by the amendments. These are the considerable number of unemployed who applied for benefit service 31 March 58, and who failed to qualify as the claims were filed too late. There can now be reconsidered in the light of the new legislation.
