Cairo Crowds Vent Wrath On Moslem Group

By Ian Fawcett

CAIRO, (Reuters)—Premier Gamal Abdel Nasser's military regime Wednesday arrested hundreds of Moslem Brotherhood members in a crackdown expected to spell the death of the militant religious-political organization—at least in its present form.

The mass arrests, which totalled 300, followed an attempt on Nasser's life in Alexandria Tuesday night, allegedly by the brotherhood. An interior ministry spokesman said the arrests probably will reach a total of more than 500 in the next 24 hours.

A frenzied, torch-wielding mob Wednesday set fire to the brotherhood headquarters here in a fierce demonstration of loyalty to their handsome, 36-year-old premier. Later, the shouting crowd almost mobbed Nasser as he arrived by train from Alexandria.

POPCULAR SUPPORT Tuesday night's abortive assassination attempt, the first against a member of the ruling military junta, has had two immediate effects:

1. It produced a tremendous demonstration of support for the Nasser regime which ousted King Farouk from his throne 27 months ago.

2. It increased the chances of the brotherhood's being broken up in its present form. The organization may be re-formed under new leaders sworn to support the government.
