Unholy Bond

Naomi raised her eyes. "What's wrong with that?" "Cliff has his heart set on being a surgeon," Janet interposed. "Is that all? Maybe I could fix it up with Dad, Cliff—he could have you transferred to another department." His face reddened. "No, thanks, Naomi, this is my own private battle."

He dashed into the kitchen and they heard the back door slam. Janet's heart began to pound with fear. They stood there in the hall listening, the three of them—Janet, Naomi and Cliff. Abby came out of the playroom and hurried past them; they were hardly aware of her. Janet's pulse was throbbing in her throat; she put out her hand.

"Cliff, I'm afraid, I'm afraid—" "Easy, Janet," His fingers tightened on her arm. He picked up his coat. "I'll go outside and see if I can help." He looked away from her to hide the uneasy premonition in his eyes. They followed him uncertainly into the kitchen. One of the small leaded panes was lying in fragments on the floor and already the snow was drifting through the gaping hole. Mrs. Miles came in from the cottage, her gray hair so powdered with flakes that it resembled an old-fashioned wig. "I thought I heard a shot," she said, and stared at them, a question in her eyes. "Someone broke the window," Janet explained. "Richard has gone outside to investigate. Mrs. Miles, please go in and stay with the children—we'll be right back." Richard and Abby had preceded them, their floundering steps making a blurred, indistinct pattern in the new layer of snow. The trail led around the house, away from the kitchen.

They trudged along in single file and just as they turned the corner near the children's sun room, another shot rang out. It was followed by a shout from Richard, muffled and angry. "Put down that gun, you fool! You're going to do some real damage."

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear Mother, Mrs. A. P. MacEachern, who passed away June 6, 1948. Gone but not forgotten. Inserted by her family.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear husband and father, Duncan J. Campbell, Argyle, who departed this life June 6, 1951.

Today our thoughts they all go back. To just one year ago. When all our smiles were turned to tears. By a sad and bitter blow. The Angel of Death did beckon you. And you were called away. And left us, oh, so lonely. On that sad June day. God called you because you were suffering. And we could help you no more. And those who sleep in Jesus are not dead. Only just gone on before. Lovingly remembered and sadly missed by wife and family.
