MUSCULAR CRAMP.

Massage Said to Be the Only Certain Remedy For the Trouble.

Muscular cramp, muscular exhaustion, or myalgia, as it is variously called in common and medical parlance, is often confounded with neuralgia and rheumatism. There are undoubtedly many instances of muscular cramp in which one or the other of the last named conditions is present. But in these cases the exhaustion depends upon the existing neuralgic or rheumatic condition and disappears under treatment of the original trouble. Myalgia—the word is derived from the Greek, and means muscular pain—arises from exhaustion of the substance of the muscle. This loss of vitality is in most cases the result of subjecting the muscle to excessive or long continued activity under favorable conditions. The amount of vitality which a muscle consumes when in action is, of course, proportionate to the amount of work required of it, and under normal conditions the supply furnished by the blood is sufficient for the need. Under adverse conditions, however, there is no opportunity offered for the complete recovery of the muscle from its labors, and a strain is the result. The muscle feels lame and sore, and not infrequently one can almost imagine that in some way it has become tied into knots. Myalgia may attack any muscle, though there are certain ones which, by reason of their location, are endangered more than others. Seamstresses are very liable to have cramp in the muscles of the shoulder on account of the steady application and confinement necessitated by the nature of their occupation. A favorite seat for myalgia, as most of us can testify from painful experience, is in the calves of the legs. The pain is especially severe on lying down at night, and may be so great as even to draw up the limbs. Massage offers the only certain relief from myalgia. The rubbing should be brisk to insure an abundant circulation of blood to the distressed muscles, and for this reason also it should be in the direction of the vessels through which the blood flows. Liniments of various kinds may be tried, or, what is better, the external application of alcohol may be resorted to. Cloths wrung out of hot water, with a teaspoonful or so of laudanum sprinkled on them, and placed directly over the aching muscles, are useful to ease the pain. When the trouble is in the muscles of the leg, hot footbaths may be employed to restore the circulation in the limbs and to "draw out" the pain. The observation of general hygienic measures should not be forgotten where there is a tendency to muscular cramp.—Youth's Companion.

Claudia's Relation.

Little Claudia Hill, the granddaughter of Senator Money, is a little girl of many quaint sayings. One day a friend of the family came to the house, and while waiting for the young ladies to appear entered into conversation. He asked her if she loved him. "No," she said gravely. "I don't love anybody 'cept my relations." "But you love God, don't you? He ain't a relation." "Why, yes, he is. He's my heavenly Father."—Washington Capital.

He Knew What It Meant.

A mother was assisting her little boy with his geography when they came to the word "desert," which he could not understand. His mother explained it was a barren place—a place where nothing would grow. The boy's face brightened up at her words, and, feeling sure that he had solved the difficulty, she asked him to explain the meaning, and the prompt answer came, "Ma feyther's bald head!"—Scottish Nights.

His Cheque Good

For Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars.

He Finds in Paine's Celery Compound a New Life.

In one of our large Canadian cities there resides one of Canada's merchant princes, who can at any moment write his cheque for hundreds of thousands of dollars. Some time ago this merchant prince was a very sick man. Liver troubles, headache and insomnia were fast pulling down a strong physical frame. Doctors showed great care and attention on their wealthy patient, but no cure came to cheer him in fact no perceptible benefit was felt after months of treatment. A voyage to the south of Europe was then undertaken, and weeks were spent in one of the most famous watering places, but to change for the better was experienced. Returning home, the merchant prince received a visit from his faithful pastor, who strongly urged the use of Paine's Celery Compound, a medicine that had some years before cured a member of his family. The good advice of the ministerial friend was promptly taken; the great healing compound was used, with the result that in five weeks the sick man and his family were overjoyed with proofs of recovery and new health. Restful sleep was restored, digestion was improved and a brighter look came into the eyes and face. After four months' careful use of Paine's Celery Compound and proper dieting, every deadly and treacherous symptom of disease had vanished, and the merchant prince was a new man. What a wondrous and happy proof of the life-saving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound! Surely the statement is powerful enough to lift all poor and helpless sufferers from the dark pit of despair. This story of a true cure was related by an intimate friend of the cured man, who gave permission to refer to it publicly, without giving the name of the once-dying merchant.

A Surprise Party.

A New York woman, only a day returned from securing a Dakota divorce, was holding a reception in celebration of the event when a messenger arrived announcing that he had a present for her. The large parcel on his arm secured his admittance. The hostess stepped forward to take the package, but instead was served by the messenger, a lawyer's clerk, with a summons and complaint, under the late decision of the New York supreme court, in a suit for separation and custody of their son begun by her husband. The woman fainted, and the party broke up in confusion.

APPARENTLY A HOPELESS CASE.

A Kincardine Banker who Suffered Distressingly from Indigestion—Apparently a Hopeless Case of Stomach Trouble Until South American Nerve was Used—His Words are: "It Cured Me Absolutely."

What this wonderful remedy for all forms of stomach trouble can do is best told in the words of John Boyer, banker, Kincardine, Ont. "About a year ago, as a result of heavy work, no doubt, I became very much troubled with indigestion; associated with it were those terribly distressing feelings that can hardly be described in any language. I had tried various methods of ridding myself of the trouble, but with no success, until I was induced to use South American Nerve. The result, and I gladly say it for the benefit of others—this remedy cured me, and I never hesitate to recommend it to any person affected with any form of stomach trouble." WHERE RHEUMATISM IS UNKNOWN

No Matter How Intense the Pain, South American Rheumatic Cure will Remove it Quickly—A Lady of Highgate Tells What it Did for Her—Permanent Cure of a Case of Years Standing.

It has been declared by scientists that every disease has a remedy. The difficulty is to always find the remedy. In Rheumatism, South American Rheumatic Cure has been found a certain antidote for this painful disease. It is always effective. Mr. N. Ferris, wife of a well known manufacturer of Higigate, Ont., says: "I was seriously affected with rheumatic pains in my ankles, and at times was almost disabled. I tried everything, as I thought and doctored for years without much benefit. I was induced to use South American Rheumatic Cure. To my delight the first dose gave me more relief than I had had for years and two bottles have completely cured me." For sale at Dodd's Medical Hall and by Geo. E. Hughes.

THE DARK MAN.

Rose o' the world, she came to my bed And changed the dreams of my heart and head. For joy of mine she left grief of hers And garlanded me with a crown of furze.

Rose o' the world, they go out and in And watch me dream and my mother spin, And they pity the tears on my sleeping face, While my soul's away in a fairy place.

Rose o' the world, they have words galore, And wide's the swing of my mother's door, And soft they speak of my darkened eyes, But what do they know who are all so wise?

Rose o' the world, the pain you give Is worth all days that a man may live, Worth all shy prayers the colleens say On the night that darkens the wedding day.

Rose o' the world, what man would wed When he might dream of your face instead? Might go to his grave with the blessed pain Of hungering after your face again?

Rose o' the world, they may talk their fill, For dreams are good, and my life stands still, While their lives' red ashes the gossips stir, But my fiddle knows, and I talk to her. —Norah Hopper.

THE BAGPIPE.

Something About the National Musical Instrument of Scotland. The bagpipe of Scotland is the only instrument of which it may be said that it is distinctly national. The violin, the flute, the horn and other instruments are common to many nations, but the bagpipe is peculiar to Scotland, and although it does not now occupy the position it once did it is found in no other country. In the days when the notorious Rob Roy committed his depredations, when the Vich Ian Vohrs lived securely in their highland fastnesses and kept up their dignified social position—in the stirring times of which Sir Walter Scott has told us—the bagpipe player was one of the important personages in the chieftain's retinue, and these may be considered as the palmy days of the instrument. Within the region more strictly known as the highlands its shrill note was the first sound that fell on the ears of infancy; it charmed the rude Caledonians in times of joy and comforted them in scenes of mourning; it animated their heroes in battle and welcomed them back from their conflicts, and wherever their chiefs went it accompanied them, even to the grave. The effect of this wild instrument on the highland soldiers is marvelous. Above the rattle of musketry and the turmoil and roar of the battlefield the inspiring notes of the pibroch have spoken encouragement to the Highlanders and led them bravely forward. At the battle of Quebec, when the troops were retreating in disorder and the conflict had a most discouraging aspect, the general complaint was about the demoralization in Fraser's corps. "Sir," said an officer, "you did very wrong in forbidding the pipers to play. Nothing inspires the Highlanders so much. Even now they would be of some use." "Let them blow, then," said the general. So the pipers started a well known air, and the highlanders rallied and bravely returned to the charge. Some say that the bagpipe came down from the Romans; others, that it came through the northern nations of Scotland. At any rate, it seems to have always been one of the musical instruments of the Celtic race. The pipe mentioned in ancient history was simply what is known as the shepherd's reed. After a time a bag was added and subsequently the drones or burdens. There are four forms of the modern bagpipe—the great highland bagpipe, which is blown by the player, the drones being placed over the shoulder; the lowland bagpipe, which is provided with a bellows for supplying the wind; the Northumberland bagpipe, which is smaller and sweeter in tone than the former two, and the Irish bagpipe, which is a much more complicated instrument.—Philadelphia Times.

A Lucky Mistake.

"You've heard of a cripple being beaten with his own crutch," remarked the man who has reached that degree of fortune which imposes nothing more arduous than the clipping of coupons and the collection of rents. "Something very like that happened me when I first went to Denver, at the time things were humming there. I was doing well and always have been a good deal of a crank in the matter of dress. My clothes had to be made at the highest priced establishment and my footwear at the fanciest shoemaker's. I had fallen in love with the daughter of one of the wealthiest citizens, and she reciprocated. "One eventful evening I called on the stern father to gain his consent, with the possibility of a blessing thrown in. I found him smoking on a rustic bench in the shade and saw in his comfort a harbinger of good tidings. But he was hot headed, I was pertly independent, and the interview terminated by his kicking me across about an acre of lawn to the sidewalk. "I was so humiliated that I began arrangements for leaving town at once. Among other things, I called at the shoemaker's for a pair of fine boots with kid tops and patent leather trimmings. After the proprietor had searched for a time he suddenly shoved his glasses up, looked foolish and said: 'Silverton must have your boots. He called for his the other evening when I was busy, and I just pointed to this corner, where the two pairs stood together.' "Silverton was the man I had honored by asking him to be my father-in-law. I hastened to his residence to have those boots or another row. The old fellow was so nearly tickled to death with having kicked me off the premises with my own boot that he looked me up and gave me his daughter."—Detroit Free Press.
