
WILL TRACK MOON ROCKETS

This is part of the U. S. Air Force's moon satellite tracking station located at South Point, Hawaii, largest island of the Hawaiian group. The tracking station includes a 60-ft. parabolic antenna, left, and a smaller helicial antenna. right. The installation was completed in three months. There are only two others of its kind, one at Singapore and the other at Manchester, England.

THOUGHTS FOR OUR TIME

BY HIS EMINENCE CARDINAL McGUIGAN

APPLICATIONS OF THE DIVINE LAW

"Secularism" is the term applied to that attitude of mind and heart which separates religion and the truths revealed by religion from the practical living of our daily lives. The adoration is reduced to a perfunctory, though perhaps quite devout and regular, attendance at Church; the sense of the worship of God in every act of our lives, the direction of all of our life to God, is lost.

One manifestation of this secularism in our society is the cavalier attitude of many of us to civil authority. This shows itself in a scorn for traffic regulations, income tax law, and customs restrictions. St. Paul, no friend of Rome, indeed the victim of Roman persecution, yet urged the Christians to obey civil authority — and why? Because civil authority is but a reflection of the sovereign authority of God Our Father.

God has created man to live in society, and to find in that society a real, though finite, happiness. In order to achieve that happiness it is necessary that these societies of men be guided by authority, and that authority is a sharing as it were in the very authority of God.

It is true that we vest that authority in the statesmen of our choice, but that power that they exercise is not our creation; it is a power to which we ourselves are subject. Secularism, and human pride, which is its source, tend to make us imagine that we are the wielders of this power that the government and the servants of the government exercis, and so persuade us that we need not be subject to it.

The results we see all too clearly. Because we regard traffic laws regulating speed and insisting on caution and courtesy while driving as solely human injunctions, we ignore them, and the result is the carnage on our highways.

Because too many of us consider customs and income tax regulations as exclusively human laws, those of us who conform to them are forced to bear an unjust portion of the tax burden. These laws are special — and important — applications of the divine law, and we owe them our respect and our obedience.

When we think of the multiplicity of laws necessary for the proper functioning of a society, we are amazed at their complexity and minuteness of detail. There are laws governing medical practice, the care of cemeteries, architecture, education, marriage and every other area of social life.

At first we might wish to revolt against what appears to be a mass of restrictions. But if we cast aside the "secularist" mentality, and see these regulations as special applications to our society of God's own laws of justice and charity, and as guides to aid our society in achieving the good of all, then we can view them, not as mere restraints, but as occasionns of loving and serving God.

Most civil laws are formulated to protect the rights of all of us. It is only when these rights are safeguarded that we can work toward that human order and happiness which is a reflection of the order and happiness of heaven. When these human laws are just, determined by right reason concerned for the common good, then they are a reflection of the infinite justice of God Himself. They have more than a merely human character.

We love God by adhering to His commandments which are the expression of His Will. And just civil laws — and we certainly admit the justice of our civil laws — are the applications of one or other of these manifestations of the divine will to particular human situations.

Seen in this way, even civil law, obeyed out of respect for authority, the Divine Will working in that authority, can be a means of reminding us of God's continual loving care for us, and a means of reminding us that even these smallest acts of our lives are His concern, and by our obedience we can make them acts of love and obedience for Him.

Hunter's Corner

Hunters are expecting a record opening days shoot on October 1st this season for, according to observation and reports, our local duck hatch bids fair to constitute a record dating back for at least five years. My own personal observation is limited due to a change in occupation but former contacts have most encouraging reports regarding the current duck crop and this covers several other species apart from black ducks.

Poaching between now and the opening morning can throw a monkey wrench into the opening morning hopes of many duck hunting enthusiasts if it gets out of control. There always was and always will be out of season shooting but when this practice becomes general its time to sit up and take notice. It was pretty grim at the close of the 1st Great War. It was demobolized on May 9th, 1919. My last duck hunt had been on August 20th, 1914, I pulled out for the Great Unknown the following morning. The season opened on August twentieth in 1914 but opened on September 1st in 1919.

During the War it was apparent that each hunter had his own opening date. As soon as a brood of black ducks had reached the flapper stage they were classed as fitting targets. I inquired of a duck hunter who was old enough to know better, he was in his fifties, why he shot ducks before they could fly. His reply threw a new light on the thinking apparatus of poachers. 'They're so tender and juicy then they'll melt in your mouth; after they're awing for a few days they get tough and stringy. Once birds starts flying they develop wing muscles but I for one prefer my game with some substance when dished up on a platter and not a mess of mush. This guy would'nt have to chew at all. It would just be one slurp after another.

I made up my mind that my old stamping ground would be left alone and warned the duck hunters in my district to wait until the opening morning on September 1st. The afternoon of August 31st was warm and sunny and I suddenly felt the urge to ..sit watch over my old shooting ground. On a hardwood ridge overlooking the duck hole I sat with my back against the bole of a birch and watched several hundred ducks sunning themselves on logs and hummocks, or disporting themselves in the water within gun shot. At intervals a vagrant breeze whispered in the leaves over head and a westering sun threw a dappled pattern on the ground.

I knew the time was drawing near when the ducks would betake themselves to the tidal flats off Irving's Bar to return again in the dawning. My vigil would soon be over and a good duck shoot on the morrow assured. The soft snapping of a twig behind me brought me back to reality with a bang. In a matter of seconds a furtive, crouched, figure with a single barrelled shotgun at the ready glided by within a few feet of where I lay. He was a neighbor lad in his late teens and one I had warned to lay off this particular spot. I could have stuck my foot out dna tripped him but I did'nt want to frighten the ducks. He was puffing with excitement and making ready for the shot when I gave a soft 'hiss' and bckoned for him to squat beside me.

'What in H.. are you trying to pull off?' He sure was surprised gent but he was one who was never stuck for an answer..'Looking for a hawk' was his reply. A quick comeback but not quite good enough. I made it short and to the point; 'Listen chum, if I ever catch you back here again hunting ducks out of season I'll wrap the barrell of your gun around a tree. You get that...do you?' His reply was equally to the point: 'Yeah, I've got it.' He did get it too for there was no more poaching.

I kept him with me until the ducks took off to the Flat of their own accord and I got my limit the following morning. One shot at those ducks sitting and another while they milled in the air would have put this spot out of commission, so far as duck opening morning. It is quite possible such an act would have saved some ducks. I am willing to admit that pre-season shooting drives ducks out to the tidal flats where they are relatively safe when the opening barrage breaks in the dawning but..there is a principle involved, let every hunter get an even break. There will be poaching this summer.. they are at it now..so its up to the duck hunters to protect their don't want your opening day's sport ruined that is!

Canadian Research Puts MASTER Ahead

There is no substitute for feeds which are custom-built to meet the conditions under which they will be fed. Master dairy Feeds are developed in Canada, thoroughly tested on the Master Feeds Farm, proved and improved through the experience of leading Canadian dairymen.

As part of Toronto elevators continuing program of research, the Master Feeds Farm has recently begun the purchase of identical twin calves. The reason behind this is that in nutritional research on milk production, one set of identical twins is approximately equal to 22 unrelated individuals.

You can be sure of good results when you follow the proven Dairy Program and feed Master Dairy Feeds. See your Master Dealer.

Scott's "Anti-Gray" Revives Hair Tones

If your hair is faded and gray-streaked, but you don't want to use a tint or dye, here's good news.

A new product, developed in Miami, Florida, is a revoluntionary new method of restoring natural looking color to gray hair, for men and women.

This greaseless, white cream with a pure lanolin base is now available in Canada at leading Drug and Department Stores.

This new formula is called SCOTT'S ANTI-GRAY HAIR TONE and is available in two sizes — $3.00 and $6.50

SCOTT'S ANTI-GRAY HAIR TONE is a lanolated promade that will not wash off nor stain, and will not rub off on clothing or pillows. It is not a tint nor a dye, and there is a money-back guarantee. This beauty aid for the hair is simple to use; just rub it in every day for two or three weeks and then only as required. You will look younger, with more lustrous, glowing hair—so why not start now, for a "crowning glory" in the months ahead.

Available at Cantwell's, Hughes, Giggey's, Reddin Bros., Jenkins and Semple's Drug Stores.
