Mr. Clow was accompanying Mr. Glen Miller, driver of a cream delivery truck, while he was delivering cans on the route coming home from Charlottetown. He climbed on the top of the truck to secure them, and Mr. Miller started the truck. Shortly after Mr. Clow was on top of the truck, a telephone wire struck him on the throat, and pulled him off the truck, after which he fell to the road sustaining a smashed hip. Mr. Miller did not notice Mr. Clow's absence until he arrived at the next gate, and then he saw Mr. Clow lying on the road. arranged so that they would have a definite association with some of the more familiar stories in the Gospel.

A very pleasing number on the program was a folk dance "Come Let Us Be Joyful", under the direction of Mrs. Edwin Johnstone, and performed by a number of the older girls. Miss Jane Johnstone explained about the hand crafts and how they were related to the theme of study. By an impromptu dramatic sketch of Palestinian occupations and a market place scene, the children then illustrated to their guests how dramatics were also used to link up with and reinforce the Bible study.

Before closing, Mrs. Lantz conducted quiz which clearly indicated that the lessons learned by the children were firmly established in their minds. Benediction by Rev. Mr. Evans brought the exercises to a close.

Handwork Periods

An enjoyable part of the Junior Vacation School at Trinity Church were the handwork periods when youngsters stretched their imaginations and built the homes of African people, the colorful Bedouin tents of Palestine as well as its squatty white houses and a pictorial map of the land where Jesus had lived and taught.

Assisting in the supervision of the handwork was Miss Jane Johnstone who leaves in early September for Toronto to enter the United Church Training School. Miss Johnstone said the projects were woven into the theme of the day. For example, she explained, on the days when the African projects were created, African stories, songs and games were used, each showing how Jesus taught mankind to love every color and creed.

Tiny round, flat-roofed huts were built from Island clay and cardboard; some huts contained windows to symbolize Christianity casting light upon superstition and causing improved social conditions.

Another project showed a scene
