Living Costs Higher

The basic seasonal indemnity of $4,000 was set in 1920 and the additional expense allowance of $2,000 a year added in 1945. He said the basic rate has lost all relationship to living costs during the last 30 years.

Increases Justified

As for salaries of cabinet ministers, speakers of both Houses and leaders of the opposition, the fact they had not been increased since 1929 now justified increases.

The total pay of each cabinet minister would be $27,000—a "most modest amount" compared with salaries of senior business executives in Canada.

Mr. St. Laurent said he had been reluctant to approve a $10,000 increase in his salary—wing from the first of the session last year to $14,000. But considering future prime ministers it was "less than fair" to forgo the increase.

Mr. Drew said that if present rates have stood for 30 years they can remain unchanged a few months more while a royal commission decides the proper amounts.

Examine All Facts

The government always had argued that Parliament should not increase expenditures without careful examination of all the facts. It was "ten times as sound" that a full investigation be made when members themselves were to be the beneficiaries.

There was a general belief that indemnities for members of the Commons should be adequate. But the government's proposal was a "rolled-up grab bag" involving increases for senators, cabinet ministers and others.

"Surely no member is going to go blindly ahead and grab for the whole thing, just because he thinks one part of it is proper."

Dealing with senate indemnities, Mr. Drew raised a laugh when he said he had heard no suggestion of difficulties in getting members for the Senate even at the present indemnity.
