Before and After Marriage

Dorothy Dix

Courting Days Are Full of Fraud

Before marriage Mary was sweet-tempered and soft-spoken. After marriage she was a shrew and a virago. Before marriage she had laughed at all of John's witticisms and looked up to him as an oracle. After marriage she told him that she had heard all of his jokes while she was still in the cradle, and she quoted other men's opinions to him.

Before marriage John lavished presents on her and stepped out with her every night. After marriage he asked her where was that quarter he gave her week before last. He told her that a wife's place was at home in the kitchen. Before marriage he was tender and considerate. After marriage he was a grinding tyrant with a temper like a sore-headed bear.

There is such a difference between what men and women think they are getting in marriage and what is really handed to them that you can't wonder that so many of them who have been taken in in a confident manner, and dish out our most alluring line of conversation. Otherwise we would probably all be old maids and old bachelors which God defend.

Today's Letter Box

Dear Dorothy Dix—I am a 19-year-old girl with a good job and wholly independent of my family financially. This is my problem: I am not permitted to select my own friends, even though I only go with nice girls and boys. But any one the family hasn't picked out is made the subject of so much criticism that it takes all the pleasure out of being with them. If I make a date, my mother insists on going along with me. I do not mind her presence myself, but no boy ever takes me out but once because he doesn't want to drag an elderly woman along with him. The situation makes me very unhappy. What can I do about it? SARAH.

I wish I knew, Sarah, but criticizing each other's friends is an indoor amusement in which every family indulges. It doesn't matter whether you are 19 or 90, as long as you live at home your father and mother, brothers, and sisters will pull every one you go with to pieces and find something to criticize. They will be too fat or too thin, too lively or too dull. They will wear the wrong clothes. Something will be amiss. One of the chief reasons why families break up as soon as they can is because the different members of it want to get away from the tongues at home and be able to do something, or have something, without always being kept on the defensive about it. Surely your mother must be a woman who is far behind the times if she does not know that chaperons are as extinct as the dodo, and that no girl can ever expect to have a date if she drags Mother along with her. Most boys find it all they can afford to pay for the girl's good time, and their pocketbooks don't permit an extra member on the party. Besides, mother kills the party. She doesn't want to go to the places they want to go. She doesn't enjoy the things they do. She wants to go home and go to bed about the time things are starting. So when the Boy Friend thinks of having to ask her to dance and drag her around a ballroom as if she were a ten-ton truck, he passes up the girl.

As for Mother's pretext of going out with the girl to take care of her, that's silly when you think of the girl working all day long in an office full of men. If the girl can take care of herself then, she can take care of herself when she steps out a bit of an evening. It is a great handicap to a girl to have an old-fashioned mother, and for the girl's sake Mother should try to come up to date.

DOROTHY DIX

Visiting Arborfield Camp, near Reading, Berkshire, a few days ago, Britain's War Minister, Mr. Hore Belisha, found the militiamen, with two weeks of their six month compulsory training period behind them, well adapted to army life and enjoying it keenly. On his tour of the camp, he stopped to pose for one of the young militiamen, and this picture of "the snapper-snapped" resulted.

Promotion For Dr. Bayfield

State College and will assume his duties there Sept. 1. Dr. Bayfield succeeds Dr. C. O. Swanson head of the department for many years who is retiring. Dr. Swanson is a recognized authority throughout the world for his work in cereal chemistry. Dr. Bayfield's appointment to succeed Dr. Swanson speaks highly of Dr. Bayfield's reputation in this type of work.

Dr. Bayfield is Cereal Technologist of the United States Department of Agriculture and associate in agronomy at the Station at this time. He was directly responsible for the establishment of the federal soil wheat laboratory at the Station in 1936. This laboratory tests all new soft wheats in eastern United States.

The department which Dr. Bayfield will head is the only one in the United States where four years of work can be secured in milling industries. The department includes seven other members besides the head of the department. Dr. Bayfield's work there will include teaching and research work.

Dr. Bayfield has become widely known through his work here and made frequent trips to all parts of the wheat country in connection with his research work. He

Problem: find the dog. But what C. p. B. Skervyle-Glegg of the British military mission has "on track" is not a pet but a steel dispatch box, containing documents, too important for any chance of their loss to be taken, bearing on matters to be discussed at the Moscow conference.
