Queen Elizabeth's

in as practised a manner as the Queen and the duke. The day the carnival began at the mouth of the Thames when the royal yacht Britannia had anchored for a few hours in the early morning after steaming through the English Channel Friday.

As soon as the ship began the 52-mile voyage up the winding river to London the clamor of welcome started. Guns boomed a salute and ships hoisted their sirens. Everything that could float put to sea in the wide river estuary. All along the banks crowds watched and cheered. Thousands of car horns broke into chorus. At Woolrich, 180 jet fighters of the RAF and RCAF screamed down to less than 1,000 feet above the yacht.

CHURCHILL ON DECK

Also on deck on the Britannia was Prime Minister Churchill, nautical in blue jacket and yachting cap. He went aboard the Britannia of the south coast Friday night and unexpectedly stayed for the trip up the river.

At the end of the Britannia's voyage, the great tilting arms of the Tower Bridge were raised, the yacht steamed through, came to a stop. The Queen, gazing eagerly, suddenly spotted her mother-in-law, Princess Margaret, on the small tower pier. She waved to them excitedly. The Queen Mother and Margaret went out to the royal yacht in a launch.

After lunch on board the Queen with her family climbed down onto the royal barge and fifteen minutes later was at Westminster pier, under the Houses of Parliament and Big Ben. Officials, in top hats or dazzling uniforms, bowed and whispered their welcome. The Queen wore a champagne-colored tulle coat, but on her feet were the white sandals she had in the tropics and she carried a white handbag.

MOVED BY WELCOME

Elizabeth, obviously moved, kissed members of her family. Churchill, who had left the Britannia earlier to come on ahead, bowed low. He gravely shook Prince Charles' hand and said: "Hello, young man." Then, leaving the river and the sea behind, the Queen, the duke and the children piled into the carriages and rolled into the London streets behind the bobbing horsemen of the Household Cavalry.

As the Queen entered the palace the royal standard, the sign that the sovereign is in residence, hoisted and rolled up the roof. A military band played "Here's a Health Unto Her Majesty."

the part of director Henri Norbert with a new acting form. Instead of acting the tragedy in the manner of the comedie française or with the realism of modern drama, director Norbert instructed his cast in a more austere style. Actors used their voices and faces almost exclusively to convey action and feeling. Movement on stage was almost stiff.

ADJUDICATOR Hunt said the play was executed with professional excellence. He said he was particularly intrigued by "the daring experiment of a new acting technique to put over a classical play to a modern audience."

Other festival awards were announced by Mr. Hunt. The Henry Osborne Challenge Trophy for best actor went to Gordon Robertson of the Kingston Domino Players for his role of Christopher in the play, "The Playboys of the Western World."

Fire Saturday Burns Dwelling At Burton

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry O'Holloran, Burton, near O'Leary, was destroyed by fire of unknown origin Saturday morning about ten o'clock.

Mr. O'Holloran was away working at the time and the house was occupied by Mrs. O'Holloran and seven children ranging in ages from six years to two months, all of whom escaped without injury. Neighbours quickly gathered but the fire was far advanced and a scarcity of water hindered any chances of saving the dwelling. All household effects, furniture, etc., were lost with the exception of the kitchen stove, table and chairs. The Women's Institute of the District organized assistance for the family and neighbours helped Mr. O'Holloran to fix up one of his buildings as a temporary home. It is not known if any insurance was carried. —CR

Dr. Martin Bandler, son of Dr. and Mrs. S. Bandler of Alberton, was one of this year's graduates in medicine from Dalhousie University.

Born in Vienna, Dr. Bandler came with his parents to Canada in 1941. After six months' residence in Montreal the Bandler family came to Alberton in January, 1942. As a boy of eleven, Martin joined the grade 6 class in Alberton School. Despite the handicap of a language which he had not known before coming to this country, he made a creditable showing in his studies and when he completed grade ten three years later he was winner of the Governor General's Medal.

He attended Prince of Wales College for three years before entering Dalhousie for one year in the pre-medical course and the five-year course in medicine, the last mentioned including one year's internship at the Victoria General Hospital. As a university student, Martin continued to show the unusual ability he had displayed in his school days and of him the University Year Book says: "A steady student, he achieved a brilliant record in the exams of his clinical years."

Dr. and Mrs. Bandler motored to Halifax on Monday to attend the convocation of the graduating class of internes of the Victoria General Hospital Monday evening and the university convocation Tuesday morning.

Dr. Martin Bandler will spend the summer with his parents, assisting his father in a well established practice. Later he will take a post-graduate study.

Many friends in his home town extend warmest congratulations and the assurance that they will follow with genuine interest the career of this young man in whom they feel a justifiable pride.

Originator Of "Blitzkrieg" Tactics Dies

MUNICH, Germany (Reuters)—Col. Gen. Heinz Guderian, 65, German military mastermind who "invented the blitzkrieg" tactics of the Second World War, died at his home in nearby Fuesen Friday.

One of the leading prophets of tank warfare, stocky, bright-eyed Guderian saw his theories vindicated when the armored armies which he organized demolished Poland, France and the Low Countries in 1939-40.

He personally led the German tank break-through at Sedan which started the fall of France in 1940 and then pushed his armored columns on to the English channel in defiance of Hitler's orders.

A professional soldier with an avowed dislike for politics, Guderian rose to fame and power almost entirely during the reign of Hitler.

An unknown colonel when the Nazis came to power in 1933, he was head of the German general staff when the Second World War ended 12 years later.

But after the war, like other German generals, Guderian violently criticized the Nazi dictator, claiming his military "intuition" had sensed Germany's downfall.

Guderian was scheduled to face a German denazification court after the war, but charges were dropped in 1950 because of lack of evidence.

He spent his last years writing a book on his experiences, "Panzer Leader." One of his last statements was a plea for the West to build more tanks as the only possible way of stopping Russian aggression.
