

Guest Speaker From Japan Addresses WA

Sonoko Nishi-mura of Tokyo, Japan, was guest speaker at the September meeting of St. Marks Senior Anglican WA held in the church hall, Kensington. Miss Nishi-mura told something of her impressions of Canada, and spoke of various aspects of life in Japan. She said the English language is compulsory in school, but only reading and writing. Housing, she said, is a problem, and the buildings are built very high. Asked about earthquakes the speaker replied that she had experienced earth tremors which give one a very uneasy feeling indeed. Of the climate, she said there is not much difference in that of Japan and Canada. The young people ski, dance and swim for recreation.

Miss Nishi-mura studied on a scholarship in a St. John's Newfoundland university during the past year and is now on her way home. Having read the L. M. Montgomery books as a young girl in Japan, she was spending a few days in Prince Edward Island in a dream come true. As a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Moase the Japanese girl had been accompanied by them on visits to L. M. Montgomery's birthplace, and the scenes so vividly described in her books.

The president, Mrs. Elmer Moase, presided and Mrs. Ernest Mill led the devotional period. Mrs. E. J. Fiander acted as secretary in the absence of Mrs. Albert Stafford who is convalescing after an accident. On the matter of study, for the coming year, the members decided to continue with the Principles of Union. Mrs. H. L. Howard read a letter from the Lord Bishop Davis responding to a message of sympathy on the death of his wife. Mrs. Elmer Paynter invited the members to her home for the October meeting, when Mrs. Cecil Mill will lead the devotions, and Mrs. Elmer Moase will speak on one of the mission capsules and the text word will be Harvest. An invitation was received from St. Stephen's WA to meet with the other parish groups in Irish-town Hall on the following Tuesday to hear a report from Synod by Mrs. Ellis Profit.

Refreshments were served by several of the ladies. Gabriel Keough, the bride's brother was best man, and the ushers were Grant and Lincoln Keough. A reception followed the ceremony, at the Rainbow Room, where the bride's mother received wearing a two piece dress of mint green, with matching hat and bone accessories. Her corsage was of yellow carnations. The groom's mother was in an aqua two-piece costume with white hat and accessories and a corsage of white carnations. Arthur Lightfoot was master of ceremonies and Rev. Austin Bradley asked the blessing and later proposed the toast to the bride. The guest book was circulated by Mary Ellen Wyle of Moncton, N. B.

On a honeymoon trip to New Hampshire the bride wore a suit of oyster wool, with a brown hat and accessories and a corsage of Orange Delight roses. The out-of-province guests included Mr. and Mrs. Pat Orcutt, London, Ont., Mrs. Clyde W. Moore, Portsmouth, N. H., Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Paynter, Moncton, N.B., and Eleanor LeBlanc, Moncton, N. B. Both Mr. and Mrs. Millar responded expressing their thanks for the gifts and good wishes. A pleasing feature of the evening were piano selections by Mrs. Edwin Johnson who was also the accompanist for a singing. Refreshments were served by the ladies.

Mrs. and Mrs. Millar have three children, Phyllis, Barbara and Barry.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Farmers Are Thankful For Filling Granaries

Tonight in the house across the lane, we remember the little family is once more complete. We have looked into there so many times to see them gathered happily about the table, the parents: he after a manner, reminding of us of his maternal grandfather, quiet of voice but meaningful, she a smallish sincere lady, who ever looks well to the ways of her household. And the four children: Peter a first year schoolboy, mostly smiling and happy Alex in his nine years, a sober chap and knowing, Mack, a manish lad, recently turned seventeen, taking a share in the farmwork and all its interests, and the one sister of theirs, since a small one a dependable lass who fits in nicely with the rest. Now that she and Mack have come to adult affairs, the circle there is often incomplete. He, missing of late while attending Fairs on the mainland was now back to home and family again.

His return had been set for today. The time was indefinite. Would he come on the first crossing, he and his cow-kid? Or later? We allowed time for the ride along the Island countryside from the Ferry, noting its hours of sailing pass on the old clock. And the morning spent away. The noontime crossing would bring him. At dinner James wondered, "What can be keeping the boy?" We knew his parents, even in their busy-ness, were keeping an eye to the hilltop. Scampie would be the first to tell his return. While the afternoon was still new, in echoing barks along the valley, he glimpsed the transport approaching, then quieted to allow us to hear the lows of the animals presently backing down the ramp - the relieved, "Bless us! After our travels, aren't we come home to the pastures again! Who's first to the stream? And won't it taste good after that piped water! And after all, what means a ribbon on a coat? It's nothing to a bite of green grass."

"What did you bring me?" Peter queried. "I brought you myself!" Mack grinned. "Isn't that enough?" That was enough. The absent one had come back to his own. And September was generous with her sunshine, and a light wind stirred the leaves in the lawn trees. The combine continued the harvesting in a field within sight of the cooks. The trucks brought in the increase from the springtime's seeds. And never before in a harvest did a grain-house fill so quickly with the returns from the fields.

"There'll be a nice lot for the stock!" James said. "Island farmers in general will not have to depend so much on imported grains this year."

Now the chickens meant for the winter's larder, and the bantams, have a fine time gleaning on the yards for fallen grains. "Here's corn for supper!" Alex said bringing in golden ears. What fullness there is now from garden and orchard to help the cook in making her meals, or to store against the seasons ahead. So our day passed into the sunset and the afterglow, and the stillness, which was enhanced by a cricket's tune from the lawn. Now we have the starry dim of the night so lovely too, the tuck away with our own gleanings into memory, as we fold up the tent of our day.

Until tomorrow - Diary - - - Good-night. . . .

MARY HAWORTH

Mother's Bossiness Is A Trial To Her Daughter

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Because of her financial situation my mother lives with my husband and me and will continue to. This is as certain as taxes. In the past she was able to help us financially but her only income today is her social security pension.

My husband is aware of some of this, but not of her grumpy pitch towards him. In fact, he gives me little lectures on having more patience and overlooking her faults. What can I do? Help! Pastoral counselling or talking to our doctor is out. She reads your column, which - just possibly might do some good. Thanks for listening, anyway. P. N.

DEAR P. N.: The trouble is between you and your mother, a sort of tussle under the rug, with your husband a kind of innocent bystander, hardly aware of what goes on. The situation, as I diagnose it, is this: Your mother, activated by a need to be needed, a not uncommon female hunger, aspires unconsciously to function as the heart-and-center of your household, with you as her child and your husband as her foster son, and with her supervisory attention penetrating everything. It simply hasn't dawned on her that your marriage and the whole train of social activities pertaining to it - your partner-

She wants to go everywhere with us, doesn't go anywhere on her own and has no close friends. We always include her in our parties, cookouts and gatherings at home. If she were more fun to be with, we'd probably take her out more. All this is having a peculiar effect on my feelings for her. When I try reasoning with her, she gets indignant, figuratively goes on strike, retires to her room and pouts for a while. My husband and I kid around

Margaret Kennedy who spent her summer vacation on the Island, is home again. She is in charge of the ship coming-and-goings, phone calls, friends, hours, etc. properly belong to a package not to be opened by her, as it were.

She is making the pitch that as your mother and perfectionist live-in housekeeper she has formidable title to a front row seat and a voting voice in your daily routine.

Also she is pretending to herself at least, that the central loneliness of her widowed pensioner status doesn't exist. She is being busy-busy about your affairs, instead of candidly facing up to the two-day diplomatic problems that her presence creates.

The truth is that in making a good marriage with your spouse you've orbited out of your mother's bosom, psychologically and socially speaking. And now that events require her to live with you, she should take your separate adult stature into account and try with open heart to be useful, considerate and the over-crowded arrangement.

Above all, she shouldn't indulge in the double dealing of gratifying herself with perfectionist housekeeping activities on the one hand, while making blackmail use of these services on the other hand, to confuse you into "conceding" to her.

My advice to your mother is to get family relations counselling help in adhering to practices of behaving well in the circumstances, which are awkward at best for all involved. M. H. Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Guardian.
