A MAIDEN FAIR.

BY CHARLES GIBBON.

CHAPTER X.

The first person Annie encountered on the deck was Cargill, and for an instant she shrank from him, clutching the top of the cabin to prevent herself from falling backward.

During the time of danger the most terror-stricken face of all on board had been that of Cargill. He grasped the nearest rope of the rigging, and clung to it as if he were already drowning, and this was the last straw of hope. His flabby cheeks grew yellow, and his fishy eyes started in his head more prominent than ever. He had never contemplated the possibility of a wreck.

He advanced to the captain several times, as if to speak, but saw that he would receive very little grace if he attempted it. Then he walked back to the cabin skylight and hovered about it as before. But when they were fast in port he met the captain on his way to the cabin, told him of the dram he had given to Ross, with many expressions of regret at the almost fatal consequences, and taking his full share of the blame. At the same time he offered his flask to the captain, who very willingly took a dram whilst saying:—

"It was a foolish thing for you to do, though kindly meant; but it was a—weel, we'll no say nae mair about that. I dinna want to be in a passion when I gang doon to him. I'm no gaun to prosecute him, as I might do; but out o' this boat he goes this minute, if he has to be carried out."

"Don't be too hard on him, captain. He must have had a drop before that he did not take into account. One glass could never have had such an effect upon him."

"He maun hae had a guid wheen draps afore—confound him—for you see I hae taen a big dram the noo, and I'm a heap the better o't, instead o' being the waur. But that's no to the purpose. He had nae right to touch onything when he was on duty."

"All the same, captain; for your own sake don't be hard on him."

"Oh, I'm no gaun to be hard on him, as I hae told you. I hae had ower muckle liking for him for that. I'll manage quiet enough; but we maun get him ashore; I canna thole to hae him near me."

So the captain went below, and Cargill, as before, hovered about the cabin, and thus encountered Annie when she rushed up from below.

"Do you want anything—can I get it for you?" he asked eagerly.

"No—yes—thank you," she said excitedly, and with a little confusion. "Wait a minute."

She passed him and ran to the bow, where the men stood in a group, talking and smoking. As there was to be no discharge of cargo till the following day, they were all taking their ease and discussing the strange events of the passage.

"I want you to go down to the cabin, Jock," she said, touching the arm of a thick-set, gray-bearded man, "and bide with Bob Ross:—he is not well."

"You're fashing yoursel' ower muckle about him, missy" (that was her name on board the Mermaid); "but I'll do your bidding."

"I tell you all, he is not well; he was not fou."

"That's just what I was saying," asserted a sturdy fellow named Campbell—the same who had been the look-out at the moment of peril, "for he was speaking to me no half an hour afore he put the wheel wrang, and he was as sober as a judge."

The man said this doggedly, having just been contending with much opposition from his mates.

"You are right, Campbell," said Annie, grateful to find some one who agreed with her.

"Go you up to the town and fetch the best doctor you can find that will come immediately."

Then she went back to Cargill, who was waiting for her with every appearance of stolid patience in his general bearing; but the fishy eyes rolled restlessly between the shore and the group of men to whom she had been speaking.

It was the last gloaming—the hour when sea and land appear most beautiful, touched by the saddest, sweetest, most mysterious lights and shades.

Suddenly there comes a glory in the sky; great shafts of lights of many colors, like straight rainbows, dart across it through white streams, and the eyes are filled with wonder.

"This is the first time I have seen the Northern Lights, Miss Murray," said Cargill as he advanced to meet her; "and they are certainly admirable."

"Ay, they are fine," she answered gravely, checking the inclination she felt to show her dislike for his conventional expression of admiration: "we who have seen them before believe they are something more than admirable—we cannot put our wonder into words."

"That is exactly how I feel," he answered, evidently quite unconscious of the rebuke conveyed in her simple words. "But remarkable as these phenomena are, will you believe it, there is something which occupies my mind so much at present that I am unable to give them proper attention?"

"Indeed!"

"It is true. May I tell you what it is, Miss Murray?"

"May I speak to you first, Mr. Cargill?"

Even his dull self-conceit was taken aback by this curious way of replying to his question. He fancied he had spoken in the tones of a charmer—he did believe himself an invincible lady-winner—and she spoiled all his fine preparations by a request which he could not refuse. He had a great objection to be crossed even in trifles.

Yet she had spoken very quietly; and the wonder overhead—now appearing as luminous white streams simply—shone on her calm, sad face, making it so beautiful that for the first time he became vaguely conscious that there was something in the world finer and nobler than himself.

He made the grand bow which a dancing master had taught him, and which he had learned to perform with less grace than an awkward elephant might have shown.

She smiled in a sad, half-hearted way; but still she smiled, and his good opinion of himself was restored. That bow had conquered her.

"I was going to ask you, Mr. Cargill, what did Mr. Ross look like when you gave him that dram from your flask? Did he look as if he had been drinking?"

His answer was so prompt that to her quick wit it seemed to have been studied.

"I really did not think so, or you may be sure I would have been the last person in the world to add to the poor fellow's affliction—to say nothing of the fact that consideration for our safety would have prevented me doing so."

"Did you speak to him?"

"For a few minutes, yes."

"And I. answered you sensibly enough?"

"I must say that so far as my recollection goes, he did. No one was more surprised than I was when the real state of the case was brought so unpleasantly before us. But of course I had no suspicion that he could be guilty of such—such stupidity."

He had hesitated over the word he should use; for he desired to show a friendly disposition toward Ross.

"Thank you, Mr. Cargill. It was a pity you gave him that dram."

She turned away, looking anxiously for the return of Campbell with the doctor. Cargill's heavy paw rested on her arm.

"Are you forgetting, Miss Murray, that I asked to be allowed to speak to you?"

"No."

"Then permit me to do so now" (he had resumed his grand air and the flabby smile which he thought so winning). "You know the question I want to ask; your father wishes you to say yes; and I need not say that I desire you to say yes."

She turned upon him those clear bright eyes and that fair troubled face.

"I will speak honestly, Mr. Cargill, and it will save you and me a heap of vexation, maybe. I know what you mean, and I tell you once for all that as long as I live my answer will be the same to you as it is now—you can never have yes from me."

"But your father would like it."

"Ay, but he would never wish me to do what I do not think would be right."

The man was not a wooer; he had not the feelings of one. So instead of persuading, instead of feeling that he must give everything to win the one object he desired, he felt his pride wounded, he drew up his big frame and used reproach.

"It cannot be that after what has happened you still think of this man, Ross! You yourself said that a man who could disgrace himself as he has done would not be worth thinking about."

"You have no business with what I may think, Mr. Cargill."

Then she looked up and her eyes brightened again as she cried: "Here's the doctor."

It was curious how the pride-puffed form of Cargill appeared to collapse at that announcement, and he slunk back a few paces.

Campbell came forward with a grey-haired, muscular-looking gentleman, whose fresh, healthy face gave evidence that he lived much out of doors. On the way to the steamer Campbell had told Dr. Pratt the circumstances of the case, so that he was ready to see the patient at once. Annie went down to the cabin with him, and after some hesitation Cargill followed, but stopped at the foot of the stair.

Ross was lying on the seat where he had fallen when he made his attempt to leave. He was again in a state of stupor. Captain Duncan was moving restlessly about; Jock Burns was standing by, stolid and indifferent.

Annie watched the doctor's face eagerly whilst he was examining the patient; and waited, breathless, for his verdict.

The doctor treated the case in a brisk, off-hand way as one of mere drunkenness, and Annie's heart ached with shame.

"He is a strong, healthy fellow," he said, "and there is nothing the matter with him except that he has had a drop too much. Put him into a berth and let him sleep it off. He'll be all right when he wakens."

Then the doctor, too, was against her; he also found that common explanation for the condition of Ross. Annie felt that the last hope of convincing her father that there was a mistake was gone. According to the doctor, there had been no "fit," no sudden attack of illness—only that vulgar crime of drunkenness.

But she had faith, and she did not despair even now.

Ross wakened in his berth early in the morning; but he was not yet "all right" as the doctor had predicted he would be. He was certainly much better; but he was still confused, and for a little while unable to comprehend his position.

Then it flashed upon him with cruel vividness—the drink—the disgrace.

He could not yet recollect all that had happened, but enough was clear to make him anxious to get away from the Mermaid without causing more pain to Annie. With that thought he turned out of his berth and soused his head well in cold water. Then he had only to pull on his boots and fasten his necktie, for his clothes had not been taken off.

That done, he made his way to the deck, purposing to go on shore and take the first train home. What was to be done afterward would be decided when his head was clearer.

Early as it was, however, Captain Duncan was already astir, and as soon as Ross appeared from below, they met.

"I am sorry for you, Bob, but it's the best thing you can do to gang hame by train. I dinna think I could thole to hae you on board after what has ta'en place. Had you done it at any other time, I wouldna hae thought muckle about it; but when you were at the wheeel and at such a place—oh, confound it, I canna think aboot it wi' any patience."

Ross bowed his head and could not speak. Presently the captain went on:—

"How's ever you can mak' your mind easy sae far that I'll no speak a word about it, and the lads will haud their tongues for your sake. At the same time I am done wi' you."

"It's very good of you, captain" said Ross, speaking low and huskily; "but although you may hide it from other folk, you cannot hide it from me. That's the worst of it. I don't know yet exactly what I have done or how I did it; but I dare say I shall learn it all soon enough. Thank you, and good-by."

He went on shore, the captain looking after him with something wistful in the expression of his ruddy face. Suddenly he turned and shouted,

"Campbell—here. You gang up to the station wi' Bob Ross and see him safe into the train. I'm doubtin' he's no just himsel' yet."

Campbell obeyed willingly; he was the only one except Annie, who had the slightest doubt as to the cause of Ross' disgrace.

When Cargill rose and learned that his rival was safely off, he was in high glee. He had no doubt that now with a clear course before him and with her father on his side, he would speedily overcome Annie's objections. In his cunning schemes, however, he did not take into account his own clumsiness. Annie did.

Suffered Without Help—Eighteen Years Getting Worse—Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

BRIDGEWATER, N. S., Nov. 30 (Special).—There is no man in this town better known than J. S. Morgan, tinsmith, who for eighteen years had been going from bad to worse without help until at last he got hold of the right treatment. He says: "It began with backache, pains in the limbs, and finally settled down as rheumatism. I was a cripple, and after I ran down greatly in weight the doctors said it was diabetes. About a year and a half ago I quit everything else and took Dodd's Kidney Pills. Have taken twenty three boxes, and have regained my weight, health and strength. I am perfectly cured.

The sudden revival of commerce in the United States is attributed to the endorsement of protection.

Completely Knocked Out.

"I was so much run down I had to give up work, and I felt as if life was not worth living," writes Wm. W. Thompson, Zephyr, Ont. "I took Scott's Sarsaparilla and am now feeling as I did years ago." Scott's Sarsaparilla tones up the entire system, purifies the blood, and eradicates rheumatic and scrofulous poisons. Ask for Scott's and get it.

An Electric Switch.

A method by which a switch may be operated by the motorman of a car as it approaches the switch was recently given a public test in New York.

The switch apparatus consists of a double solenoid motor and a current reversing switch, all of which are contained in a box under the switch tongue, 18x36 inches in size. The electric current is applied by means of the regular controller through an insulated section of track near the switch terminal. On approaching the switch, if the motorman sees that it is placed right for him he shuts off the current, allowing the car to skid over the insulated section. If, however, the switch tongue is not in the right position for the track he wishes to take, he leaves the current on, or if necessary, gives a little more current when the insulated section is reached, and the switch is thereby instantly thrown in the direction required.

The whole apparatus is extremely simple and constructed in a very substantial manner, and it is claimed to be practically impossible for any part to get out of order. No extra fixture is necessary on the car, the simple act of turning on or off the current while the car is on the insulated section being all that is necessary to operate the switch.

He Was Enlightened.

"And before I go," he said, "there is one matter upon which I should like a little light."

"And what is that?" she asked.

"Your feeling for me. Do you love me?"

"Yes."

The young man stood at her side, a happy smile playing over his face.

"Well—"

A blush came into her cheek as she spoke—

"Don't you think you have had all the light you need?"

He was a wise young man, and understood.

A MESSAGE TO MEN.

Proving that True Honesty and True Philanthropy Still Exist.

If any man who is weak, nervous and debilitated, or who is suffering from any of the various troubles resulting from youthful folly, excesses or overwork, will take heart and write to me, I will send him confidentially and free of charge the plan pursued by which I was completely restored to perfect health and manhood, after years of suffering from Nervous Debility, Loss of Vigor and Organic Weakness.

I have nothing to sell, and therefore want no money, but as I know through my own experience how to sympathize with such sufferers, I am glad to be able to assist any fellow-beings to a cure. I am well aware of the prevalence of quackery, for I myself was deceived and imposed upon until I nearly lost faith in mankind, but I rejoice to say that I am now perfectly well and happy once more and am desirous therefore to make this certain means of cure known to all. If you will write to me you can rely upon being cured and the proud satisfaction of having been of great service to one in need will be sufficient reward for my trouble. Absolute secrecy assured.
