A FALSE ALARM.—On Saturday night last, between nine and ten o'clock, when the steamer Britannia was some nine hours out from Boston, a ship was sighted about seven or eight miles off sending up rockets and showing other signals of distress. Captain Doane promptly changed the steamer's course and putting on extra speed bore down on the distressed craft. In about half an hour's time she got up alongside, when it was discovered that it was pilot boat No. 3, of Boston, that was showing the signals. Captain Doane asked what was the matter, and was coolly informed that those in charge of the boat had mistaken the Britannia for an ocean steamer and supposed she wanted a pilot. Captain Doane then asked why they could not see that the steamer was going to the eastward, but received no reply. Neither did he get an answer when he asked the men on board the boat why they showed signals of distress when there was nothing the matter. Those on board the pilot boat had evidently shown the signals of distress in order to attract the steamer's attention and secure a job. The pilot will likely be reported when the steamer gets back to Boston.

Accident to the Worcester

Struck on a Rock, But Floated Off.

HALIFAX, Aug. 17.

The steamer Worcester, while on her way from Halifax to Charlottetown, struck on a rock off Canso at 7 a. m. on Saturday, while going full speed, carrying away her shoe and part of her keel and rudder. The steamer pounded considerably, but floated off and drifted and steamed with part of her rudder until she got about four miles off the automatic buoy, when they anchored. The steamer Dorcas steamed alongside on Tuesday with a bargain tow. She took hold of the Worcester and towed her to Port Hawkesbury. The passengers for P. E. Island landed at Port Hawkesbury, and with the fruit and other perishable cargo, will be transferred to Charlottetown by the steamer Fastnet.

[When the S. S. Britannia arrived at Port Hawkesbury on Monday evening she heard of the case of the Worcester, and as quickly as possible put out to look for her. About half past five next morning she sighted the Worcester some six or seven miles north-east of Canso light in tow of the tug Dorcas, of Halifax. The Britannia got alongside the disabled steamer as quickly as possible and Captain Doane asked if he could do anything for her. The reply was that they needed no assistance—that the Dorcas was going to tow them into Port Hawkesbury. The Britannia then put back to Port Hawkesbury and reported the facts of the case to their agent there, after which she proceeded to Charlottetown, making a splendid run.]

DUBLIN, Aug. 15.—The Evicted Tenants, the society of Cork, have adopted resolutions demanding that a short bill be passed before the adjournment of the House enabling tenants to deal with landlords on fair terms of purchase, and protesting in the names of the Irish people at home and abroad against an adjournment until February, as is talked of, without a bill to secure the reinstatement of the evicted tenants, or the safeguarding of their interests in the interval.
