Prime Minister Wilson Slams The Brakes Hard

BY HAROLD MORRISON

LONDON (CP) — Prime Minister Wilson has slammed the brakes hard on Britain's runaway inflation with a whole string of new taxes and a demand for an immediate voluntary six-month freeze on prices and wages.

The pound sterling, sickened by the country's chronic economy malady, immediately perked up on foreign exchanges as Canadian and other officials predicted the massive deflation dose will put the country back on its feet.

Union chiefs anticipated, however, that a few more Britons will be looking for jobs. Unemployment, now less than one per cent of the labor force, may climb to 1½ per cent or two per cent, still much lower than the Canadian average.

Officials said also that Canadian and other exporters are likely to be thankful that no action was taken in the save-the-pound baby budget Wednesday to freeze imports.

However, the big domestic credit squeeze, combined with higher taxes, will likely reduce the consumer bulge in Britain's shops and cut demand for domestic as well as foreign goods.

WILL CUT EXPENSES

The government will cut its own spending abroad by about £100,000,000 ($300,000,000) a year, making savings in military and civilian outlays. This will involve shipping some troops back from Malaysia and perhaps cutting the British Army in the Rhine if the Germans don't cough up more orders for British goods to offset the foreign currency maintenance costs.

The austerity program calls for a reduction in public investment by £150,000,000 ($450,000,000), but this will not affect housing, schools or hospital building.

There will be a cut of £95,000,000 ($285,000,000) in nationalized industries during 1967-68.

Explaining details of the government's wage and prices freeze, Wilson said:

"The government now are calling for a six-month standstill on wages, salaries and other types of income, followed by a further six months of severe restraint and for a similar standstill on prices.

"Where a definite commitment already exists to increase pay or reduce hours, its implementation should be deferred for six months. New commitments should not be implemented during the rest of 1966 and in the following six months only if the grounds for exceptional treatment are particularly compelling."

Wilson said the same principles applied to other types of income. Companies, for example, must hold down dividends during the 12-month period.

MUST REVEAL SALARIES

They would also be required to publish details of fees and salaries paid to high executives.

It was not the government's intention, he said, to introduce elaborate statutory controls over income and prices, and the government looked with confidence to everyone to act in the public interest.

All streams of society are affected by Wilson's action to suck about £500,000,000 ($1,500,000,000) from the economy. The pub crawler will find the duty on beer up by a penny (1¼ cents) a pint, whisky up by three shillings, fourpence (50 cents) a bottle. Gasoline goes up immediately by fourpence (five cents) a gallon to a high of five shillings, sixpence (82 cents) for quality grades.

Wilson pushed purchase taxes up on automobiles, furniture and most other consumer goods. He also imposed new curbs on credit buying that may force British manufacturers to look elsewhere for customers.

The purchase tax on a new automobile, previously 25 per cent, now will go up to 27½ per cent. The minimum down-payment increases to 40 per cent from 25 per cent and the time to repay is reduced to 24 from 27 months. Customers will have to meet a down-payment of 20 per cent on furniture and 33 1-3 per cent on most other goods, with time to repay held to 24 months.

The restrictions include less money available for foreign travel, higher income taxes for the big income earners and a bigger price for postage.

ALLOWANCE CUT

Starting in November, the foreign travel allowance of £250 ($750) a person will be cut to £50 ($150).

This big deflation, added to action already taken to restrict bank credit and to impose a selective job tax in September, is designed to show the world Britain intends to pay its way and prevent devaluation.

But apparently Wilson had to pay a price for his new policy. One cabinet minister, Frank Cousins, has already resigned over previous action.

The wage-and-price freeze depends to a large extent on union and management co-operation, a treasury official said. Those who crack the freeze cannot be prosecuted under existing legislation though Wilson said he intends to strengthen his prices and incomes bill to make sure "that the selfish do not benefit at the expense of those who co-operate."
