A British Columbia despatch states that, on Tuesday, a murder was commited on the American boundary; a Canadian named Harris, and an American named Mitchell, quarreled about a land claim. Mitchell called on Harris, with a double barreled gun, and a struggle ensued, in which the gun was discharged, but no damage was done. Mitchell then clubbed the weapon and beat Harris to death. LETTER FROM CAPTAIN IRVING.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,—The Inspector is very kind and gentlemanly in his manner towards us at all times, but I think temper got rather the upper hand of him on the matter in question, viz:, the water boat at Cape Tormentine.

We had some conversation as to the cost and management of said boat. He had an idea the boat could be managed by the ice boat's crews. I observed to him the water boat would bring out the ice boats, at times when they otherwise would be lying back. Therefore she would require a crew of her own, and if she had not she would be apt to do more harm than good. I also spoke of the many narrow escapes the ice boats have had in effecting a landing with a few miles of water, and a S. W. or W. wind; and in the course of our conversation he said he thought the Government would give one dollar per trip, or $80 for the winter, as eighty trips were about the usual number made each winter.

I asked him how the Government got the idea of $80. He said from a correspondence he had with the Department; he also said the Government were of the opinion that nearly $3000 was a large amount for winter crossing, without having to give any more. I said to Mr. McDonald I do not see how they can think so, when an ordinary trip costs us $30, and we pay the boats from the other side nearly $800 for the few trips they make, so I do not see how they can think it can be done for less. I then said I did not think that the boat could be furnished and manned with a crew of six or seven men for less than five or six hundred dollars. Turning quickly in his chair, he said "that puts an end to the matter," and taking up a sheet of paper said "I will write to the Department; if you had said something like two hundred it might have been considered."

Now, Mr. Editor, I am very much of the opinion that the Inspector is writing to the Department unfavorably of this winter mail service. I have several times invited the Inspector up to see for himself what difficulties are met with in crossing, and to see if anything could be done, but as he does not choose to make the Capes a personal visit, he must only go on corresponding with the Department in the dark, or comparatively so.

It is likely, when the member of lesser votes from King's County goes up to Ottawa, he will put matters right at the Capes, and probably not forget to send down to the Island press the enormous sum the contractors have received for the last twenty years.

Arthur Irving.

P. S.—The above is a reply to your request in your issue of the 19th, instant.

Going out to hunt in the forest one day late last autumn, the Empress of Austria saw an old, half-crippled woman, tottering on the very brink of a high, steep river bank. Springing from her horse, she ran and caught the poor creature, just in time to save her life, and then discovered that the old woman was blind, and that the child who was acting as her guide had lagged behind. The Empress waited till the truant came up, and administered a severe reproof for its carelessness, gave the old woman a purse of gold, and then rejoined her companions in the chase.

On the occasion of Mr. Gladstone's 73rd birthday (30th ult.) he received a large number of congratulatory letters and telegrams from all parts of Great Britain. The first telegram which he received was a congratulatory message from some Australians, which arrived at the Castle at 7 30 a. m., having been despatched at 9.30 a. m., on the 29th. Among the earliest telegrams to hand was the following from the Prince and Princess of Wales:—"We desire to offer you our sincerest congratulations on the anniversary of your birthday, and hope that you may long be spared to serve both the Queen and our beloved country."
