CHAPTER XXII.

CHASED BY A "GRIZZLY."

THE bear was one of the largest of this kind; but it was not his size that impressed me with fear, so much as the knowledge of his fierce nature. It was not the first time I had encountered the grizzly bear; and I knew his habits well. I was rather surprised at seeing one in that region. The range of this species is more to the west—among the peaks of the Rocky Mountains—but individuals occasionally wander so far east as the meridian of the Mississippi.
The one before me was of a yellowish-red color, with legs and feet nearly black; but color is no characteristic among these animals—scarcely two of them being alike in this respect. I was familiar with the form and aspect, and could not be mistaken; I recognized the long shaggy pelage, the straight front, and broad facial disk, which distinguished this species from the Ursus Americanus. The yellow eyes, the huge teeth, but half concealed by the lips, the long-curved claws—the most prominent marks of the Ursus ferox, as they are his most formidable means of attack—were all remembered.

When my eyes first rested upon this monster, he was just emerging out of the barrenca at the very spot where I had climbed up myself! It was his tracks, then, I had observed, while scaling the cliff!

On reaching the level of the prairie, he advanced a pace or two, and then halting, reared himself up and stood upon his hind legs; at the same time he uttered a snoring sound, which resembled the "blowing" of hogs, when suddenly started in the forest. For some moments he remained in his upright attitude, rubbing his head with his fore paws, and playing them about after the manner of monkeys. In fact, as he stood fronting me, he looked not unlike a gigantic ape!

When I say that I was terrified by the presence of this unwelcome intruder, I speak no more than truth! Had I been on horseback—on the back of Moro—I should have regarded the creature no more than the snail that crawled upon the grass. The grizzly bear is too slow to overtake a horse; but I was afoot, and well knew that the animal could outrun me, however swift I deemed myself.

To suppose that he would not attack me would have been to suppose an improbability. I did not count upon such a thing; I knew too well the disposition of the enemy that approached. I knew that in nine cases out of ten the grizzly bear is the assailant—that no animal in America will willingly risk a contest with him; and it is not certain that the lion of Africa would wear his laurels after an encounter with this fierce qua-druped.

Man himself shuns an encounter, unless mounted upon the friendly horse; and even then, where the ground is not clear and open, the prudent trapper always gives "old Ephraim"—the prairie sobriquet of the grizzly—a wide berth, and rides on without molesting him.
The white hunter reckons a grizzly bear equal in prowess to two Indians; while the Indian accounts the destruction of one of these animals a great feat in his life's history. Among Indian braves, a necklace of bear's claws is a badge of honor—since these adornments can only be worn by the man who has himself killed the animals from which they have been taken.

On the other hand, the grizzly bear fears no adversary; he assails the largest animals on sight. The elk, the moose, the bison, or wild horse, if caught, is instantly killed. With a blow of his paw, he can lay open the flesh, as if it had been gashed with an axe; and he can drag the body of a full-grown buffalo to any distance. He rushes upon man, whether mounted or afoot; and, ere now, a dozen hunters have retreated before his furious assault. A dozen bullets—ay, nearly twice that number —have been fired into the body of a grizzly bear without killing him; and only a shot through the brain or the heart will prove instantaneously mortal.

Gifted with such tenacity of life, and sanguinary fierceness of disposition, no wonder the grizzly bear is a dreaded creature. Were he possessed of the ferocity of the lion or tiger, he would be a more terrible assailant than either; and it is not too much to say that his haunts would be unapproachable by man. He is slow, however, compared with the horse; and there is another circumstance scarcely less favorable to those who pass through his district—he is not a tree-climber. Indeed, he does not affect the forest; but there is usually some timber in the neighborhood of his haunts; and many a life has been saved by his intended victim having taken refuge in a tree.

Well acquainted with these points in the natural history of the grizzly bear; and you may fancy the feelings I experienced at finding myself in the presence of one of the largest and fiercest upon the naked plain alone, dismounted, almost unarmed! There was not a bush where I could hide myself, not a tree into which I might climb. There was no means of escape, and almost none of defence; the knife was the only weapon I had with me; my rifle I had left upon the other side of the barrenca, and to reach it was out of the question. Even could I have got to the path that led down the cliff, it would have been madness to attempt crossing there; although not a tree-climber, the grizzly bear, by means of his great claws, could have scaled the cliff more expeditiously than I. I should have been caught before I could have reached the bottom of the ravine.

The bear was directly in the path. It would have been literally running "into his arms" to have gone that way!
These reflections occupy minutes of your time to read; I thought them in less than moments. A single glance around showed me the utter helplessness of my situation; I saw there was no alternative but a desperate conflict—a conflict with the knife!

Despair that for a moment had unnerved, now had the effect of bracing me; and, fronting my fierce foe, I stood ready to receive him.

I had heard of hunters having conquered and killed the grizzly bear with no other weapon than a knife, but after a terrible and protracted struggle—after many wounds and sore loss of blood. I had read in the book of a naturalist that "a man might end a struggle with a bear in a few moments, if one hand be sufficiently at liberty to grasp the throat of the animal with the thumb and fingers externally, just at the root of the tongue, as a slight degree of compression there will generally suffice to produce a spasm of the glottis that will soon suffocate the bear beyond the power of offering resistance or doing injury.

Beautiful theory! Sagacious naturalist!
How would you like to try the experiment? Have you ever heard of birds being caught by the application of "salt to the tail"? The theory is as correct as yours, and I am certain the practice of it would be not more difficult!

But I digress among these after-thoughts. I had no time to reflect upon "compression of the tongue" or "spasms of the glottis." My antagonist soon finished his reconnaissance of me and, dropping upon all-fours, he uttered a loud roar, and rushed towards me with open mouth.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Mr. Finlayson, town clerk of Stirling, Scotland, was noted for the marvelous conversation. He was on a visit to the Earl of Montich and Airth, in the castle of Taha in the loch of Montich, and was taking leave when he was asked by the Earl if he had seen the sailing cherry tree.

"No," said Finlayson; "what sort of thing is it?"
"It is," replied the Earl, "a tree that has grown out of a goose's mouth from a stone the bird had swallowed, and which she bears about with her in her voyages round the loch. It is now in full fruit of the most exquisite flavor. Now, Finlayson," he added, "can you, with all your powers of memory and fancy, match the story of the cherry tree?"

"Perhaps I can," said Finlayson, clearing his throat and adding: "When Oliver Cromwell was at Airth, one of the cannons sent a ball to Stirling, and lodged in the mouth of a trumpet which one of the troopers in the castle was in the act of sounding!"

"Was the trumpet killed?" asked the Earl.
"No, my lord, said Finlayson; he blew the ball back and killed the Artilleryman who fired it."

Lima advices state that the announcement of the appointment of special commissioners to South American Republics by the United States has caused a decided improvement in the market. No new developments there and probably not till after their arrival.

The number of known thieves at large in Great Britain in 1880, including depredators, receivers of stolen goods, and suspected, was 29,466, against 51,048 in the previous year, and 40,625 in 1878.

The Empress Augusta of Germany is far from being a beautiful old lady. She is tall, painfully slender; a woman of many angles, whose sharp features express a stern, hard, and haughty nature.

England and Scotland retire aged and infirm school teachers on pensions, and have 270 on the rolls. The pensions range from $100 to $150 a year.

Prince Bismarck hopes to secure the support of the whole Centre, and with it carry all Government measures, including the Tobacco Monopoly bill.

It is stated in Montreal that a third offer for the Occidental railway has been made to the Quebec Government on behalf of an English syndicate.

The shipments of gold from British Columbia, for the year 1881, were eight hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

A Berlin despatch says the naturalization treaty with the United States has been extended to cover all Germany.

you may be sure that there is one less rascal in the world.—Carlyle.
