in the lumber camps of Maine and Miramichi where he led a wild reckless life which got him in the end, and reduced him to such abject poverty that he was obliged to peddle printed copies of his works for a few pennies each.

"Me name is Lar-ry Gor-r-man To all hands I mean no har-r-m Ye need not be alar-r-med, Ye have heard of me before.

"I can make a song and sing it, I can make it neat and bring it, And the title that I'll give it, Is the 'Scow at Cowden Shore'."

Larry would arrive at a new camp, and before morning have a verse or two about the entire camp crew. In the winter of '73, he worked as a driver at McCullans' Camp at Snowfall's Mill in Chatham, and it was while here that Larry composed one of his longest songs, a few verses of which follow:-

"On the eighteenth of September, In Eighteen and seventy-three, I left my native island, And came to Miramichi.

"I was hired the day I landed, To work in Snowfall's Mill, That large two-story building, At the foot of Sawdust Hill.

"I drove with Billy Derringham, A verse for him I'll make, He drove a gray (horse) and a roan, That he brought from Grand Lake.

"The horse he weighed twelve hundred, And a noble beast to haul, The mare she was a beauty, too, Although she was but small.

"Here was another island man, Here among the rest, Three feet across the shoulders, In proportion round the chest.

"Though very big, not very cute, Jim Whalen was his name, On the seventh of March he cut his foot, And he marched off down stream.

"He took with him five pounds of gum, The ladies' hearts to gain, But all the thanks he got for it, They said he was too green.

"He blowed the roost upon me, And said I made the song, And proved himself a traitor, For which many's the man was hung," etc.

"And here's two verses from an other Larry's rollicking lumberjack lyrics:-

"Ho, there's danger on the ocean, When the waves run mountain high, And there's danger in the battle-field, Where the angry bullets fly.

"And there's danger in the lumber woods, Where death lies lurking round, And there in Eighteen Seventy-nine, My seam of life I found,"-etc.

In the days of poor wages and hard times, Larry's quip on the operator of the camp runs thus:-

It is no wonder that Larry Gordon was liked by the woodsmen of New Brunswick and Maine? How those rollicking songs of his must have brought laughter to the hearts of the lumberjacks during the long winter nights when the day's toil was ended!

The story is told that the rhymer was once run out of Miramichi because the people there didn't like a song he'd made about the place. Be that as it may, Larry Gordon takes first rank as the Maine and New Brunswick woods Balladist, and little did he think that these crude verses of his would one day be collected and preserved for the pictures they presented of a woodman's life in bygone days.
