The Boers a Solitary People.

These features of South African nature, its silence, its loneliness, its drear solemnity, have not been without their influence upon the mind and temper of the European settler. The most peculiar and characteristic type that the country has produced is the Dutch Boer of the eastern plateau, the offspring of those Dutch Africans who some sixty years ago wandered away from British rule into the wilderness. These men had and their sons and grandsons have to some extent retained, a passion for solitude that still makes them desire to live many miles from any neighbor, a sturdy self-reliance, a grim courage in the face of danger, a sternness from which the native races have often had to suffer. The majesty of nature has not, however, made them a poetical people, although the fact that they read nothing whatever but the Bible might be expected to have stimulated their imagination and purified their taste.—"Impressions of South Africa," by Prof. James Bryce, M.P., in the May Century.

The Mule Was Glad to Get Home.

The remarkable memory of a mule that was driven to Texas from this county ten or twelve years ago was shown last year when he was driven back to the neighborhood of his old home. The mule was driven to Texas by Sam Strange, who lived in Glensfork neighborhood, and was brought back by Jonathan Watson. The first night after his arrival he broke away and went immediately to his old home, where he kept his dulciferous voice floating upon the night air until daylight. It is supposed from his actions that he, like most people, who go from here to Texas and return, had enough of the country and was glad to get back.—Columbia (Ky.) Spectator.

On Dangerous Ground.

"This book on games that we have compiled," said the German publisher, thoughtfully.

"Is there anything wrong with it?" inquired the editor.

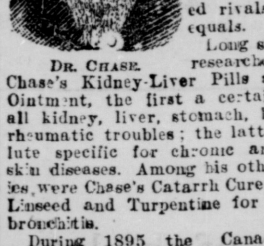
"No. It's a good thing. But I'm a little bit scared about putting it on the market."

"Why?"

"It makes the statement repeatedly that the ace is bigger than the king. If that comes to the attention of the Emperor William, he'll have us up for lese majeste, sure."—Washington Star.

A FAMOUS MAN !

What His Researches Have Done for the World.



DR. CHASE.

All successful and distinguished men have imitators, and Dr. Chase, the well-known author of Chase's Recipe Book, proved no exception to the rule. Dr. Chase's discoveries have many pretended rivals, but no equals.

Long scientific researches produced Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Chase's Ointment, the first a certain cure for all kidney, liver, stomach, bladder and rheumatic troubles; the latter an absolute specific for chronic and offensive skin diseases. Among his other discoveries were Chase's Catarrh Cure and Chase's Linseed and Turpentine for colds and bronchitis.

During 1895 the Canadian manufacturers, Edmanson, Bates & Co., 45 Lombard street, Toronto, gave away free 500,000 samples of Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and 100,000 samples of Chase's Ointment. The return they brought proved how much they were appreciated. The same free distribution of samples will be continued during 1896. Those at a distance should enclose a 5-cent stamp and also receive a sheet of the latest music in return.

A Seventeen Thousand Dollar Watch.

"While in Geneva some months ago," said Col. J. R. Reynolds, "I visited the principal watch works there, and as a matter of curiosity asked the manager what was the highest priced watch that was made in Geneva. He said that the most expensive watch turned out in Switzerland was worth $700. This watch had a split second hand and struck the hours if needed. It also had in it a tiny music box, which played three distinct tunes. This watch, he said was the finest that could be made, but that ornaments, diamonds, etc., could be worked into the cases which would run the price up into as many thousands as the purchaser desired. He said there had been one watch made in his establishment the case of which had been studded with diamonds, and which had cost $17,000, but as far as the watch itself was concerned it was a $700 watch.—Washington Star.

Friendly Solicitude.

Bradford—So all my friends were inquiring about me during my absence? It does a fellow good to know he's missed that way. And what did they say?

Thornton—Some said you'd gone to join the divorce colony, while others contended that you had entered a Keeley Institute.

Pied His Form.

First Compositor—Where's the foreman to-day?

Second Compositor—I don't know.

The Devil—He tried to ride a bicycle last night and pied his form.—Wheelman, Australia.

The Difference.

"A child," said the oracular young person, "can ask questions that a wise man cannot answer."

"There's one satisfaction," said the man of family, "he can't ask very many of 'em without getting sent to bed."

For Weak Backs, Lame Backs, Painful Backs or any kind of Bad Backs, Manley's Celery-Nerve Compound is the Great Back Strengthener.

Wm. Rogers, 5 Ottawa Street, Toronto, Ont., writes:—"For a number of years I have been troubled with a lame back. Some of the doctors I consulted called it Lumbago; others, Kidney Disease. I received no benefit from their treatment. Nine months ago I was lucky enough to try Manley's Celery-Nerve Compound, and, after taking two or three bottles, the pain entirely left me, and I have had no return of it for 8 months now."

"NOT WANTED."

SILVERPEN.

It was a house of mourning. Death had passed that way only a few brief hours before, and a hushed stillness reigned within, broken only by the wail of a new-born child. Outside, in the street, merry voices were heard exchanging greetings, the chimes were heralding the glad New Year, and strains of music floated on the air; while, as if to mock this tumult of joyfulness, crape hung upon the door, a mute testimony that a life had reached its close. Over the parlor window, blinds were closely drawn, as though to hide the crushed and lifeless form of one who, but a few hours earlier, was full of life and vigor. It was an oft told tale—an error of judgment, some trivial neglect of a man in charge of an engine, and in a few seconds strong men lay maimed or lifeless, and homes were made desolate. A trio of sad-faced women stood beside that silent form, and one raised her hand impatiently, as if she would fain hush the noisy mirth below in the streets; and looking pityingly upon the two sleeping children, happily unconscious of their loss, she whispered, "it was a pity the newly born babe had lived to increase the widow's burden."

Poor little stranger! Ushered into a cold world, unwelcomed by anyone, save the wan-featured mother, who, clasping it tenderly to her breast, thinks of the young husband and father so hurriedly snatched from her side. Never again would his strong arm shield her from hardship; never more that loving voice speak words of tenderness and cheer. Alone she must face the struggle of life, if only for her children's sake. Years of toil lay before her; yet with the fervor of mother love she longed to live, to protect and rear her dear ones.

A strange thought came to her: perhaps the little one who had come on the very day her heart seemed broken, has been sent to soothe her in her grief—a gift from God; and thinking thus, she called him "Theodore."

Three years sped by. Again it is New Year's eve, and a toil-worn, weary woman rests briefly from her still unfinished task to read over again a letter that had arrived with the morning mail.

A friend of her girlhood, who had recently lost her only son, proposed adopting Theodore, the little fatherless boy, who had been laid in that mother's arms during the first sad hours of widowhood.

It was a sore temptation; his sisters, frail, delicate little mites, needed such care; and labor as she would, it was a sorry task to keep the wolf from the door. Again she read, "You would not miss him; there are the rest." Not miss him! her only boy, her darling, the one bright spot in her shadowed path.

Not miss Theo, whose winsome ways and mirthful tricks were ever bringing some variety into an otherwise monotonous existence. A ringing laugh and the patter of childish feet were heard outside the door, and a roguish little fellow ran in with a stray kitten in his arms, for whom he begged a shelter. One swift look into his mother's face, his bright eyes read the trace of sorrow there. Hurriedly the new pet was released, and two tiny arms entwined around that mother's neck, as with his soft hand he brushed her tears aside. She hesitated no longer; despite toil, or care, or poverty, she could not spare her boy.

* * * * * * * *

Nearly thirty years have fled. How lightly we think of them when they are gone; they were lived out as other years, a moment at a time, as one by one life's trials and blessings have been disclosed.

Standing on the threshold of life, who is there that really wishes to unveil the future, and read there the sorrows to be endured, the difficulties to be overcome, the suffering and the care; but one glimpse of the truth and our courage might wane, leaving us helpless, ere the appointed hours of endurance draw nigh. Better far that we know not what awaits us, and only step by step may we reach our goal.

Yes, nearly thirty years have passed; and within a spacious hall men and women are gathered to honor one whose voice and pen have served the cause of humanity right nobly. A man, still young, stands before that vast assemblage unmoved by the flow of praise, for his reward is more likely to be found in the unspoken thanks, the grateful pressure of the hand from those whom he had gladly served.

Swiftly his mind retraces the past—his early struggle for existence, the constant battle for right, and finally the victory; and amid all, one face was ever near, one voice to whisper words of encouragement in the hour of weariness, or when he faltered in the path of duty. Still beside him, she shares his honors; her calm, white face radiant with mother love and pride. Listen to the secret of his success: "All that I am I owe to my mother." Despite stern efforts to control her emotion, her tears will flow; but they are tears of gratitude as she rejoices over that New Year's gift of long ago; the gift that came in her early days of mourning—the gift of God—Theodore—the child "who was not wanted."

THE FIRST CUP OF TEA.

It is Claimed That the Beverage Was Drunk 5,000 Years Ago.

The antiquity of tea as a beverage is a favorite subject of discussion by confirmed tea drinkers. China claims the origin of the use of tea as a drink. Of course, there are various stories connected with it, among which, perhaps, the following is quite as interesting and credible as any. As the tale runs, one of the daughters of a reigning sovereign was hopelessly enamored of a young nobleman whose caste did not permit him to aspire to her hand; but they exchanged glances, and occasionally he gathered a few blossoms and took means to have them conveyed to her.

One day the princess met her admirer in the grounds of the palace, and as the attention of her attendants was attracted in another direction, the young man tried to put a few flowers into her hand, but all that she could grasp was a little twig with green leaves. This she treasured, and when she reached her apartments she placed the twig in a goblet of water, here to remain for some hours, the object of her tenderest care. Toward evening she was seized with a sentimental attack, during which she drank the water in which the twig had been kept. It had a most agreeable taste, and then she ate the leaves and stalk. The flavor pleased her greatly, and every day, in memory of her admirer, she had bunches of the tea tree brought to her, and ate them, or put them in water and drank the infusion.

The ladies of the court observed her and were moved to try it themselves, and did so with such pleasing results that the practice spread throughout the kingdom, and one of the great industries of China was thus established. It is claimed that the date of the sentimental origin of tea-drinking was nearly three thousand years before Christ.

HOOD'S Sarsaparilla has over and over again proved by its cures, when all other preparations failed, that it is the One True BLOOD Purifier.

That

Extreme tired feeling afflicts nearly everybody at this season. The hustlers cease to push, the tireless grow weary, the energetic become enervated. You know just what we mean. Some men and women endeavor temporarily to overcome that

Tired

Feeling by great force of will. But this is unsafe, as it pulls powerfully upon the nervous system, which will not long stand such strain. Too many people "work on their nerves," and the result is seen in unfortunate wrecks marked "nervous prostration," in every direction. That tired

Feel-

ing is a positive proof of thin, weak, impure blood; for, if the blood is rich, red, vitalized and vigorous, it imparts life and energy to every nerve, organ and tissue of the body. The necessity of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for that tired feeling is, therefore, apparent to every one, and the good it will do you is equally beyond question. Remember that
