Voyage Planned To Protest Russian Tests

LONDON (Reuters) — The 45-foot American ketch Everyman III arrived at Gravesend in the Thames Wednesday to prepare to sail to Russia to protest Soviet nuclear tests. Her commander, 32-year-old Earle Reynolds, American proponent of Hiroshima, arrived in London by air from Japan to join her.

Everyman III is scheduled to sail for Leningrad later this week with an international crew of about 15, including Americans, Frenchmen, Norwegians, Indians and Britons.

A spokesman said the crew has not been given visas for the Soviet Union but hopes to get permission to land and campaign against Soviet tests and all nuclear weapons.

"If the crew is not allowed to enter the Soviet Union they will press some other attempt to land until physically stopped," he said.

"Their aim is to sail down canals from Leningrad to Moscow. On the voyage from London they intend to hold disarmament rallies in Ostend, Amsterdam, Hamburg, Stockholm and Copenhagen.

Eight other major steel companies, including U.S. Steel, have agreed under protest to submit the data. But they have been excused from doing so until the question of compliance by the other four companies is settled.

Subpoenas for the data were issued by Kefauver's subcommittee after last April's 86-2-0 steel price increase which later was rescinded under pressure from President Kennedy.

After hearing Pease, the committee recessed its inquiry until Friday.
