Thus The Bible Goes Forth . . .

In the last 12 months, over 5 tons of Testaments were released through the Bible House in Ottawa as free grants to the troops.
In over 90 lands, in over 800 languages and dialects, the Bible Society embraces every opportunity to get the Bible into people's hands. Through Colporteurs, it carries it into areas where no missionary work is done. In Non-Anglo-Saxon lands, where no other society can do it, it supplies children in schools, patients in hospitals, lepers in institutions, inmates in prisons, aged and orphans in "homes," and needy people everywhere with the printed Word.

IN MEMORIAM

In fond and loving memory of my darling husband,

ALDREN M. CARVER,

who passed away July 10, 1953.

Down a road that is calm and peaceful
Guided by God's loving hand,
He has left me on his journey
To that bright and glorious land,
And although my heart is heavy,
With the sorrow I must bear,
Still I have sweet consolation
Knowing he is happy there.
So I will look beyond the shadows
And I will dry the falling tears,
For the Saviour softly whispers,
"I will raise him never fear."
'Tis sweet for to know that we will meet again,
Where parting is no more,
And that dear one that I loved so well,
Has only gone before.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear Father, Aldren M. Carver, who passed away July 10th, 1953.

God saw that he was weary
The hill too hard to climb,
So He closed his weary eyelids

Away in the beautiful hills of God,
By the valley of rest so fair,
Some time, some day, we know not when,
We will meet our loved one there.
Lovingly Remembered by Freda, Art, and Catherine Jean.

JOY AND ENJOYMENT

"What are you doing with that suffering state I am, to be self-suffering. I know what to be abased and I know how to abound; in any and all circumstances I have learned the secret of facing plenty and hunger, abundance and want." St. Paul's spirit was an independent of his environment as any Roman Stoic, but not because of anything in himself; rather, because of what Christ meant to him.

There was a third ideal—that happiness is life's chief end, but that it is attained through virtue and service. Aristotle argues at great length for this view. We reach happiness by living according to the best we know and by expressing the best in us by doing the best for others.

Here is an approach to the Christian view. For example, how frequently Christ promised joy to his followers. In His last address in the Upper Room, He said—"These things have I spoken to you that your joy may be full." The words referred to emphasized the necessity of the fruitfulness of each branch of the Vine. He returned to this thought again in His prayer for His followers:—"These things I speak in the world that they may have my joy fulfilled in themselves." His joy—and He on the foothills of Calvary—a joy that no suffering could quench.

A sacred writer describes Christ's joy to His joy in these terms: "For the joy set before Him. He endured the Cross, despising the shame, and is seated at the right hand of the throne of God." Self-investment in others' salvation was Jesus' way to His "joy." Self-giving to the utter-

But "joy" is the fruit of purpose formed and carried through to success. One of the happiest business men I have ever known was one who had "retired" after a successful career, and then gave himself to finding opportunities for good men who, through no fault of their own, were unemployed. Success in each case gave him the keenest delight.

In ancient days there were three ideals of life's chief aim. One was the pursuit of pleasure. The satisfaction of one's own desires was life's claim on human energy and opportunity. The "Epicurean," as he called himself, sought to please himself and to find happiness in self-gratification. Of pleasure won in this way Robert Burns wrote:

"But pleasures are like poppies spread
You seize the flower, its bloom is shed,
Or, like the snow-fall in the river,
A moment white, then melts forever."

As we think of this fact today, we do not apply it to our holiday enjoyments where we rest and play for the restoration of our energies and in order that we may work the better. Yet even there, self-seeking is deadly. As has been said—"Pleasure is like your shadow—pursue it and it flees from you; turn away from it and it follows like a dog at your heels."

Another old ideal was the pursuit of virtue. The "Stoics" felt that a real man should be above the influence of his environment; adversity should not daunt him nor success exalt his spirit. He should be "self-sufficient" in all situations, and should pursue virtue without regard to the cost. This ideal has its place in all spheres of life. For example, St. Paul in prison wrote:—"I have learned in whatsoever state I am, to be self-suffering. I know what to be abased and I know how to abound; in any and all circumstances I have learned the secret of facing plenty and hunger, abundance and want." St. Paul's spirit was an independent of his environment as any Roman Stoic, but not because of anything in himself; rather, because of what Christ meant to him.
