We ask the public to remember that we sell Watches as cheap as anyone.
We warn the public against those who offer Watches for sale and take very much less than asked.
An instance came to our notice the other day where $35 had been asked and $20 accepted for a watch that we and other regular Watchmakers sell for less than $15. Since then, several similar cases have been brought to our notice.
Our object is not only to sell goods but to supply articles, whether Watches or Jewelry, that will best answer the purpose required by our customers and to sell at such a price that it will pay them to buy from us.

THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.
CHAPTER VIII.

"But what will I tell him a word about it, hinnie?" said Swertha, looking slyly up in her young master's face. "The man by token, since I maun tell ye, that I have a bonny remnant of silk among the lave, that will make a dainty waistcoat to yourself, the first merry-making ye gang to."
Mordaunt could no longer forbear laughing at the cunning with which the old dame proposed to bribe off his evidence by imparting a portion of her plunder; and, desiring her to get ready what provision she had made for dinner, he returned to his father, whom he found still sitting in the same place, and nearly in the same posture, in which he had left him.

"When their hasty and frugal meal was finished, Mordaunt announced to his father his purpose of going down to the town, or haul, to look after the shipwrecked sailor.
"The elder Merton assented with a nod.
"He must be ill accommodated there, sir," added his son—a hint which only produced another nod of assent. "He seemed, from his appearance," pursued Mordaunt, "to be of very good rank—and admitting these poor people do their best to receive him, in his present weak state, yet—"
"I know what you would say," said his father, interrupting him; "we, you think, ought to do something towards assisting him. Go to him, then—if he lacks money, let him name the sum and he shall have it; but, for lodging the stranger here, and holding intercourse with him, I neither can nor will do so. I have retired to this farthest extremity of the British isles, to avoid new friends and new faces, and none shall intrude on me either their happiness or their misery. When you have known the world half a score of years longer, your early friends will have given you reason to remember them, and to avoid new ones for the rest of your life. Go then—why do you stop?—rid the country of the man—let me see no one about me but those vulgar countenances, the extent and character of whose petty knavery I know, and can submit to, as to an evil too trifling to cause irritation."

He then threw his purse to his son, and signed to him to depart with all speed.
Mordaunt was not long before he reached the village. In the dark abode of Neil Ranzelman, the Ranzelman, he found the stranger seated by the peat fire, upon the very chest which had excited the cupidity of the devout Bryce Snailsfoot, the pedlar. The Ranzelman himself was absent, dividing, with all due impartiality, the spoils of the wrecked vessel amongst the natives of the community; listening to and redressing their complaints of inequality; and if the matter in hand had not been, from beginning to end, utterly unjust and indefensible) discharging the part of a wise and prudent magistrate, in all of the details. For at this time, and probably until a much later period, the lower orders of the islanders entertained an opinion, common to the barbarians also in the same situation, that whatever was cast on their shores, became their indisputable property.

Margery Bimbister, the worthy spouse of the Ranzelman, was in the charge of the house and introduced Mordaunt to her guest, saying, with no great ceremony, "This is the young tacksman. You will maybe tell him your name, though you will not tell it to us. If it had not been for his four quarters, it's but little you would have said to ony body, sae lang as life lasted."
The stranger arose, and shook Mordaunt by the hand, observing he understood that he had been the means of saving her life and his chest. "The rest of the property," he said, "is, I see, walking the plank; for they are as busy as the devil in a gale of wind."
"And what was the use of your seamanship, then," said Margery, "that you couldn't keep off the Sumburgh-head? It would have been lang ere Sumburgh-head had come to you."
"Leave us for a moment, good Margery Bimbister," said Mordaunt; "I wish to have some private conversation with this gentleman."

"A gentleman!" said Margery, with an emphasis; "not but the man is well enough to look at," she added, again surveying him, "but I doubt it there is muckle of the gentleman about him."
Mordaunt looked at the stranger, and was of a different opinion. He was rather above the middle size, and formed handsomely as well as strongly. Mordaunt's intercourse with society was not extensive; but he thought his new acquaintance, to a solid, sun-burnt handsome countenance, which seemed to have faced various climates, added the frank and open manners of a sailor. He answered cheerfully the inquiries which Mordaunt made after his health; and maintained that one night's rest would relieve him from all the effects of the disaster he had sustained. But he spoke with bitterness of the avarice and curiosity of the Ranzelman and his spouse.

"That chattering old woman," said the stranger, "has persecuted me the whole day for the name of the ship. I think she might be contented with the share she has had of it. I was the principal owner of the vessel that was lost yonder, and they have left me nothing but my wearing apparel. Is there no magistrate, or justice of the peace, in this wild country, that would lend a hand to help one when he is among the breakers?"
Mordaunt mentioned Magnus Troll, the principal proprietor, as well as the Fowl, or provisional judge of the district, as the person from whom he was most likely to obtain redress; and regretted that his own youth, and his father's situation as a retired stranger, should put it out of their power to afford him the protection he required.

"Nay, for your part, you have done enough," said the sailor; "but if I had five out of the forty brave fellows that are fishes' food by this time, the devil a man would I ask to do me the right that I could do for myself!"
"Forty hands!" said Mordaunt; "you were well manned for the size of your ship."
"Not so well as we needed to be. We mounted ten guns, besides chasers; but our crews on the main had thinned us of men, and lumbered us with goods. Six of our guns were in ballast—Hands! if I had had enough of hands we would never have misouried so infernally. The people were knocked up with working the pumps, and so took to their boats, and left me with the vessel, to sink or swim. But the dogs had their pay, and I can afford to pardon them—The boats swamped in the current—all were lost—and here am I."

"You had some worth about them, from the West Indies?" said Mordaunt.
"Ay, ay; the vessel was the Good Hope of Bristol, a letter of marque. She had fine luck down on the Spanish main, both with commerce and privateering, but the luck's ended with her now. My name is Clement Cleveland, captain, and part owner, as I said before—I am a Bristol man born—my father was well known on the Tollsell old Cien Cleveland of the College-green."
Mordaunt had no right to enquire farther, and yet it seemed to him as if his own mind was but half satisfied. There was an affectation of bluntness, a sort of defiance, in the manner of the stranger, for which circumstances afforded no occasion. Captain Cleveland had suffered injustice from the Islanders, but from Mordaunt he had only received kindness and protection; yet he seemed as if he involved all the neighborhood in the wrongs he complained of. Mordaunt looked down and was silent, doubting whether it would be better to take his leave, or to proceed further in his offers of assistance. Cleveland seemed to guess at his thoughts, for he immediately added in a conciliating manner,—"I am a plain man, Master Merton, for that I understand is your name; and I am a ruined man by boot, and that does not mend one's good manners. But you have done a kind and friendly part by me, and it may be I think as much of it as if I thanked you more. And so before I leave this place, I'll give you my fowling-piece; she will put a hundred swan-shot through a Dutchman's cap at eighty paces—she will carry ball too—I have hit a wild bull within a hundred-and-fifty yards—but I have two pieces that are as good, or better, so you may keep this for my sake."
"That would be to take my share of the wreck," answered Mordaunt, laughing.

The Scott Act.
Sir,—That it is possible to enforce the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act has been amply demonstrated within the last few days. That it can be much better enforced, no one will deny. A gentleman from Summerside, who has been in the habit of attending our Exhibitions for many years past, says he never saw so little drunkenness at an Exhibition in Charlottetown as at this one. This is certainly gratifying, thanks to the City Inspector. No one using his eyes could fail to see that temperance sentiment is raising pretty high—so high, indeed, that in some quarters a radical change in our Police department is demanded. Well, let it come; the sooner the better. If men holding responsible public positions will not move, will not do their simple duty, unless they are driven to do it by public sentiment, then for the sake of experiment let us see what can be done by men who, knowing their duty, have stamina enough to do it regardless of sentiment, either public or private. The Scott Act is not going to be repealed, but with the help of the different churches we are determined to have the right men in office to enforce it.
AN ELECTOR.

Inconsistency.
Sir,—At the meetings held over this way during the late Dominion election, Dr. Robertson became quite pathetic over the amount it costs the country to keep the towels in the House of Assembly clean. Pointing to that item of expenditure he exclaimed, "That is how your money is gone, gentlemen," and then he told a little anecdote about what an old man said at one of their party caucuses.
Now, I was led to believe that if the Dr. were elected this extravagance would cease. But he has not said a word about it since, although he has been to Ottawa one session and is soon going there again to attend another. It is presumed that he washes and wipes his face while there at the public expense, like other M. P.'s, and thus takes a hand in the great extravagance. If he were only consistent, he would stand up in his place in Parliament and repeat the charges he made against the Government at the meetings. But it is not at all probable that he will do so. He told the little story to get in, and now that he is in, he would not mention it in the House for the world.
Yours,
Murray Harbor, Oct. 7, 1887.
ELECTOR.

Boston Markets.
Boston, Oct. 6.
EGGS—Receipts for the week, 192 boxes, 6 barrels, 9,814 cases; last week, 24 boxes, 101 barrels, 9,124 cases. Choice fresh stock has been in steady good demand, with prices ruling a shade firmer than last week. Strictly extra Eastern are still scarce, and sell readily at 22c. Best marks of P. E. Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are selling well at 21c.
FISH—Receipts have been large this week and demand has been slack. There is still a good deal of inferior stock on the market that has to be sold at easy prices. Eastern Rose and Hebrons have to be very extra to bring full quotations. P. E. Island receipts have been quite heavy, generally green and more or less rotten, and selling for the most part at $1.75 to $2 per bbl.
FISH—The market has been quiet as a whole, with no material change in prices, but the tendency is, as a rule, in buyers' favor. Callish continue in full supply and have a moderate sale. Pollock are firm at 80c. Box herring have been selling very well and are steady at quotations. A cargo of Labrador fat split herring has arrived, and sales are reported at $5 per bbl. Receipts of shore mackerel continue pretty full and prices are easy, but Nova Scotia and P. E. Island arrivals are rather light.

From the St. John Daily News: "Few remedies have acquired much fame, and grown so universally popular in the cure of coughs and colds and all affections of the throat and lungs as Adamson's Botanic Balsam. Many persons in this city have no hesitation in recommending it to the suffering. Trial size 10 cents.
