"LAURA" THRILLING ENTERTAINMENT AT CAPITOL THEATRE, SUMMERSIDE

Forget every mystery film you've ever seen. And-for that matter-every romance, drama and comedy, too.

For 20th Century-Fox has brought "Laura" to the screen with Gene Tierney, Dana Andrews, Clifton Webb, Vincent Price and Judith Anderson, and as it was revealed to audiences at the Capitol Theatre, it stands as the freshest, most unusual and completely exciting screen entertainment of the year.

There are, indeed, so many brilliant angles and highlights in this many-faceted gem of a motion picture that this reviewer hesitates to single out any one element for special praise. It's all wonderful.

Gene Tierney is seen in the top role of her career, that of Laura, the chic advertising executive who owes her sensational rise in New York's sophisticated pre-war Harbor cafe society to a "fabulous man-about-town."

In the role of Mark McPherson, Dana Andrews introduces a new type of detective to the screen, utterly unbacked and refreshing. As wonderfully capable as ever, Andrews' portrayal is warmly human and believable. Entrusted with one of the most challenging roles of the year, he comes through with flying colors.

"Laura" brings Clifton Webb, the stage's celebrated star of suave, sophisticated comedy-drama, to the screen, and mighty welcome he is. Webb is cast in a part which he handles with entrancing perfection, that of the film's Waldo Lydecker, the middle-aged, barbed tongue Broadway columnist-critic who moulds Laura to his ideal, and tries to keep her in a glass case.
