IN MEMORIAM

MRS. F. M. CLAY

I cannot say, and I will not say that she is dead. She is just away. With a cheery smile and a wave of her hand, she has passed on to that better land.

And left us thinking, how very fair, if needs must be. Since she lingers there.

After a long life of devotion to her Master, in whose name, she went about doing good, Mrs. Deborah Clay, widow of the Rev. F. M. Clay passed peacefully on, to be reunited with loved ones gone before.

The call came to her, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. Goodridge of Newfare, N. Y., on April 11th, 1951, where she and daughter, Mrs. A. M. Faxon of Lee, Mass., were visiting, before making their regular trip to Victoria, for the summer months.

After a distressing attack of "flu" complications set in, which in spite of tender nursing, proved too much for her strength. Besides the above mentioned daughters, she leaves to mourn one, Mrs. Ruth Neary of Port Collins, Colorado, and a sister, Mrs. Thomas MacBeth of Moncton, N. B.; a brother Ernest Brien of British Columbia; also numerous relatives and a host of friends. "To love in hearts, we leave behind, is not to die." Wherever her lot was cast, her influence for good was felt in church and community. Unnumbered were the acts of kindness which fell from her hands. Her presence in the sick room was especially comforting, and like Christ of old, she gathered the children around her, to love, and teach them of their Heavenly Father. May the remembrance of her life of devotion to her Master, act as a stimulus to others, for a greater sincere Christian life.

Truman Asks 60 Billion For Defence Purposes

WASHINGTON, May 1 — (AP) — President Truman told Congress today the United States needs a $60,000,000,000 military budget to continue arming for the general war Russia may thrust upon the world.

He said the $60,879,414,890 he estimated for the fiscal year beginning July 1 is "essential to our national security" because: "The outbreak of aggression, the threat of general war that overhangs the world, make it imperative to increase our defences rapidly and efficiently."

Truman put into his message a warning of what Russia may expect if she elects to spread the war beyond the confines of the Korean conflict. He said:

"If the Soviet Union chooses to unleash a general war, the free world must be in a position to stop the attack and strike back decisively and at once at the seats of Soviet power."

Truman said "The aggression in Korea showed the Soviet rulers were willing to push the world to the brink of a general war to get what they wanted."

In The World of Books

With Will R. Bird

H. G. WELLS, PROPHET OF OUR DAY, by Antonina Vallentin; Longmans Green; 389 pages; $5.00.

Here is the story of one of the most remarkable men of the century, a man who was far ahead of his time in many respects, who seemed abnormally sensitive to happenings of his era, who lived intensely and was acutely aware of the present and its importance. He saw the history of his time in strong silhouette and spoke with assurance. His biographer writes of him as if he were one blessed with gifts extraordinary, and it may well be that in time to come, historians will name him as the man who saw farther than any other of his generation. Many have regarded Wells as a misanthropic worker in the cause of social justice. He did what he could with his impressive and emphatic pen to spread ideas that might bear fruit. Many of them did, were accepted and used by his readers, who more often than not, forgot the source of their inspiration.

Mr. Wells was one of the first to use science in fiction. He forecast radio, air conditioning, helicopters, the use of poisoned gas in warfare, armored tanks and even the atom bomb. He suggested, urged and prodded military leaders during World War I to use tanks, then was vastly disappointed when, turning to these iron monsters, they did not invite him to their conferences. He was not afraid to express his opinions on many matters, both military and naval, and his readers will remember how right he was regarding what happened at the Battle of Jutland. It was he, not Churchill, who invented the phrase "Iron Curtain."

A study of his work reveals that few writers of the English language were more adept in using fiction to serve a purpose. He could clothe the most ordinary case with fantastic allure, turn adult phrases when handling the commonplace and use his imagination to create the most extravagant situations. He was exceedingly clever. He worked for the common good in his own way, and his appeal for a wholesale revolution in educational methods is enough in itself to tell the world of the calibre of this man who lived so intensely and wrote so fluently on every subject under the sun.

THE WORLD ABOVE by Abraham Polonsky; McClelland and Stewart; 469 pages; $4.00.

The text on the cover of this unusual book describes it as the Pilgrim's Progress of this century, for the main character, Carl Myers, was in search of what an earlier age would have called his "soul." He is a doctor who is "not interested in curing men but in studying them. He is an ambitious young man who put every "thing into his work and his story has typical of a purely objective interest in scientific problems to a profound concern with the implications of those problems for humanity." Myers has all the weaknesses of the men of today, is very human and "he is not spared because he is himself a healer. But he has a courage and strength of all times, of all ages of human greatness."

As a young researcher, Myers is denied his laboratory. From that time and from when he must choose between his family whom he loves, and the work he knows must be done, to the time when a war behind him, he has achieved fame and wealth, his life is preparation. He sees his best friends ruin their lives in an agony of indecision. He sees evil triumph and good men go down to defeat. He falls in love and needs all the courage in the world to carry on and practice in his own life what he has staked in his profession.

Some of the passages dealing with packed railway cars in England, with casual characters, girl waiting comfort, drunks, unlucky ones, New York and rented rooms, have powerful writing. The problems Myers faced were not usual. It was his method of overcoming them that makes the story. The author has won Academy Awards with screen plays, and this is his second novel.

CURTAINS FOR THREE by Rex Stout; Macmillan; $3.25.

Mr. Stout is one of the most popular writers of detective fiction, and his new trick of giving three novelettes in one volume is met with enthusiastic reception. The unique talents of Nero Wolfe hold the reader no matter the length of the tale. The thrills and chills are packed in good measure and at the finish the addict can hug him or herself and turn to another treat. Three in one volume! "Gun With Wings" is one of these stories and has to do with the finding of a famous opera singer with a nasty hole in his head made by a pistol bullet. The gun from which the

It is expected that about 10,000 delegates and local "Y's" will have 3 delegates, and altogether over 5,000 are expected to attend from Canada and U. S. ### Sees Dangerous Situation Forming In Middle East

By J. M. ROBERTS, Jr.

(Associated Press News Analyst) Anti-British nationalists in Iran, taking the bit in their teeth and supported by the underground Communist Party, are creating a situation in the Middle East which may prove even more dangerous to world peace than Korea.

Anglo-American hopes of a few weeks ago for a mutually-beneficial compromise of Iran's desire to nationalize the great oil fields have gone by the boards. The nationalists have pushed through their nationalization program without regard for their country's long-term agreement with the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company. And their agitation has proved so popular that their leader has become premier. The program becomes one to drive out all Western influence.

Nationalist - Communist strikes and demonstrations have created such a serious situation that a British fleet has been gathered in the Persian Gulf ostensibly as a safeguard for British lives. The traditional role of the Royal Navy has been for protection of British property as well as lives, however. The oil fields, under British interpretation of the agreement, certainly represent British property.

The latest Iranian moves threaten to place operation of the oil wells in inexperienced hands and to dry up the flow to Britain's fleet and for other vital Allied needs. At the worst the hurriedly-mapped Iranian plan might disrupt the country's entire economy, opening the door to Russian influence.

The blackest part of the whole picture, however, lies in the fact that any British attempt to protect their rights by force would be an invitation to action by Russia. The Kremlin might not take a British attempt to police her own position in Iran as an excuse for invasion.

That would join a war for which Russia is not believed to be ready. But Russia badly wants the oil reserves of Northern Iran which have not been developed. Any British attempt to remain in Southwestern Iran through coercion and a show of force would almost certainly lead to a revival of Russia's 1946 efforts to establish a position in the north by the same means.

shot was fired is found at the base of a bust of Caruso but how it got there is certainly a mystery. The man who wants to marry the widow hires the sleuth to do some research work, though everyone thinks the matter a suicide. The result is amazing — one of Stout's best to date.

"Bullet For One" concerns the shooting of an innocent man in Central Park. Six suspects are roped in and five of them hire a detective to prove that the sixth man is the guilty one. The Mount-Ed Police are mixed up in this one and it's a topnotcher. It's a lot of excitement for one night, reading the three stories, but you'll find it hard to stop after you've read the first page.

MAKING COMMITTEES EFFECTIVE by Edward F. Sheffield; Ryerson Press; 46 pages; 75 cents.

A little manual that should attract anyone connected with a committee. We all know how ineffective some committees are and here is offered the solution what to do with non-workers, how to ensure co-operation, how to meet certain difficulties. Good advice to all chairmen.
