BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

CHATTERER IS TEMPTED

On every hand in every day, Temptation lurks along the way. —Old Mother Nature.

Chatterer the Red Squirrel was strangely silent. His usually noisy tongue was still. You know that Chatterer has one of those tongues that wag at both ends, as the saying goes. Tongues of that kind usually get their owners in trouble. Chatterer's tongue has got him in trouble more times than he can remember. Sometimes it has got him out of trouble, but not often.

"They must be big," muttered Chatterer.

Now when a usually noisy tongue is silent watch out for mischief. This is especially true with Chatterer. It almost always means that he is planning mischief of some kind. It did now.

Chatterer knew all about the big nest of Redtail the Hawk and Mrs. Redtail. It had been for several years in the top of a tall tree deep in the Green Forest. In winter he had visited the nest many times out of idle curiosity. Then the big owners were far away in the Land-of-always-summer. Of course it was perfectly safe to visit that nest. He had even hidden a few nuts in it. It was very different now, very different indeed. Redtail and Mrs. Redtail were back and were using that old nest again. Chatterer knew all about their return. He is the kind of person who most of the time knows all about what is going on in his neighborhood. People with tongues that wag too much often are that way. They usually have listening ears as well. What Chatterer doesn't know about in his neighborhood just isn't worth knowing.

This morning he happened to look up through the treetops and high in the blue, blue sky he saw Redtail sailing in big circles as he looked down with those wonderful eyes of his searching for a breakfast. Seeing the big sailor of the skies reminded the red-coated little rascal of something he hadn't thought of for a long time. He hadn't thought of it for the simple reason that it had been for a long time out of season. Can you guess what it was? No? Well, it was an egg breakfast.

Many people like eggs for breakfast. Perhaps you do. If you do you know just how Chatterer felt when he was reminded this was the season for eggs.

"They must be big," muttered Chatterer. "Yes, sir, they must be big. They must be big enough for just one to make me a breakfast." "What in the world are you talking about?" asked Mrs. Chatterer, who happened to be near enough to overhear him. "Eggs, my dear," replied Chatterer. "Just eggs." "Whose eggs?" demanded Mrs. Chatterer, pricking up his ears and licking her lips with her little tongue. "Their eggs," replied Chatterer, pointing up to the treetops.

Mrs. Redtail had joined Redtail in circling high above the Green Forest. That meant that there was no one at the nest. There was no one home. Of course Chatterer did not know that there were eggs in that nest. The only way he could get that out would be to climb up to that nest. It was a temptation. It was a very great temptation. He looked over at the tree where the nest was. It wouldn't take him a jiffy to race across the brown leaves at the foot of that tree. It wouldn't take another jiffy to race right up that tree and take a look in that nest.

Mrs. Chatterer seemed to know just what was going on in his mind. "Don't do it," she said. "Don't do what?" asked Chatterer, just as if he didn't know. "Don't go up to that nest," replied Mrs. Chatterer, but she licked her lips. Chatterer licked his too.

"My dear, I wouldn't think of doing such a thing," said she, but he licked his lips again. Chatterer was a greatly tempted small person just then.

THE MONTHLY MEETING OF THE OYSTER BED BRIDGE W. I. Institute met at the home of Mrs. Daniel MacPherson for their May meeting.

The President, Mrs. Howard Carr, opened the meeting with the Club Women's Creed.

Roll call was answered with a get-well or sympathy card, also an exchange of plants and seeds. Minutes were read, approved, and signed.

Mrs. Philip Matheson presented a receipt for two quilts she had delivered to the Red Cross Rooms.

It was decided to canvas the district for Salvation Army Red Shield appeal. Correspondence was read which consisted of an interesting letter on Agriculture by Mrs. Elmer Ramsay; also a letter from the adopted Institute in England.

It was decided for each member to make four pounds of sugar into candy to be sold at play.

Mrs. Walter Ford invited the members to her home for the June meeting. Roll call is to be answered by a donation to the Salvation Army.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem. The hostess, assisted by the committee, served lunch.

Contract Bridge

HE HOPED FOR A "BAD" TRUMP BREAK Usually, a declarer hopes for a 3-2 division of five missing trumps. In the following deal, however, South was happy to find a 4-1 break!

West dealer North-South vulnerable:

♠ A Q 3	♠ 9 7 5 2
♥ 10 7 6 4	♥ K Q J 2
♦ A K Q 8 2	♦ 10 9 7 4
♣ 5	♣ 9

West dealer North-South vulnerable:

♠ A Q J 10	♠ K J 10 8 9
♥ A 5 3	♥ A 5 3
♦ J 5	♦ J 5
♣ K 6 4	♣ K 6 4

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
4♣	Double	Pass	5♣
Pass	6♣	Double	Pass

South could, of course, have been conservative and bid only the four spades in response to his partner's "optional" double, but the fact that North had made this double at such a high level gave South slim aspirations. Certainly, he had a great deal more than North could have expected North, for his part, felt that South's jump bid was based on greater length in spades, and if South had control of hearts, the slam looked promising.

If West had laid down the club ace, South soon could have claimed the contract, but West made matters more difficult—he opened the nine of hearts. The moment dummy appeared, South saw that he was in trouble. If he drew trumps, he could win only 11 tricks—five spades, one heart and five diamonds.

After due consideration, however, South found the perfect method of play against the distribution that existed and which figured to exist in view of the bidding. He cashed in his spade king, then, since he could not afford to lead another trump, he ran the diamonds, hoping that West was now out of trumps. This, of course, was the case. South discarded two hearts, and when East ruffed the last diamond, South over-ruffed. He then led the club king, and the defenders were helpless—South could safely cross-ruff the remaining tricks.
