

Imminent Withdrawal Of Yanks Causes Dominican Fear, Hope

BY ROBERT BERRELLEZ
SANTO DOMINGO (AP)—The imminent withdrawal of the American peace force from the Dominican Republic has aroused both fear and hope among Dominicans.

The Organization of American States voted without dissent in Washington Friday night to withdraw the remaining 8,000-man peace force, and there were reports the first U.S. contingent would depart next week.

There are about 6,800 U.S. soldiers here and about 1,200 men from other Latin-American countries, most from Brazil.

President-elect Joaquin Balaguer will be inaugurated July 1, and the Dominican Republic has asked that the withdrawal start before then.

The decision to pull out the peace force has rekindled speculation over what might have happened if American troops had not landed April 28, 1965, one of the most critical days in the political storm that erupted four days earlier.

RAP INTERVENTION
Many Dominicans argue that U.S. intervention was illegal and violated sacred principles in the charter of the OAS, specifically those referring to non-intervention in the domestic affairs of member states.

But except for the small fringe of violently anti-U.S. nationalists and their political stepbrothers, the left-wing extremists, most Dominicans seem to agree the action was necessary to prevent a chaotic bloodbath of unknown proportions and indeterminate consequences.

The nationalists say the constitutionalist forces would have quickly triumphed if the Americans had not arrived and democratic rule would have been swiftly restored with a lot less expense and effort on the part of the U.S. and the OAS.

The prevailing view, however, is that a state of anarchy had overtaken Santo Domingo. The two factions involved, old-line militarists on one side and, on the other, younger rebellious officers who wanted to restore constitutionality to the country, had lost control.

The army regulars, through a stunning reversal and a critical shortage of communications, had been divided and were out of touch with strategically located battalions. On the other side, the constitutionalist military leadership, having passed out weapons to scores of hundreds of civilians, was decimated by defections of the half-hearted who took political asylum when the fighting became rough.

There is little doubt the constitutionalist forces were close to victory when the first wave of U.S. Marines landed April 28, 1965. Demoralized and confused by the lack of communications, army regulars were defeated the day before at Duarte Bridge, the vital span across the Ozma River linking important armed forces installations on the east bank with the city and military units to the west.

A tacit admission of defeat in the charter of the OAS, officials requesting intervention. The reason given was they could no longer guarantee the life or property of Americans and other foreigners in Santo Domingo.

It now is fairly certain the conflict was purely a localized clash for power among different military factions and not the massive popular movement depicted abroad.

Sickened by violence and disorder in the preceding four years, the majority of Dominicans, and particularly those outside the capital, refused to join either side. The fight never spread beyond Santo Domingo's boundaries.

There are some who feel intervention actually "institutionalized" the movement that led to the restoration of stability; that by isolating the fight, foreign troops permitted the contending factions to consolidate their forces, establish some sort of control and finally create the political entities through which peace finally was negotiated.

GROUP FORMED TO AID WOMEN

SAIGON (AP)—An association has been formed to defend the morals of South Vietnamese women faced with a growing influx of American troops.

It was named a Committee for the Defence of Vietnamese Woman's Dignity. It consists largely of women writers and teachers.

"It is depressing to see young girls with their huge American boy friends in the streets," said committee spokesman Mrs. Phan Thi Cui.

"Social corruption has become serious. Many homes have been destroyed, brothel-owners are getting rich, illegitimate babies are found in trash cans."

The committee called for social action in families, schools and youth organizations to halt the decay of morals.

EAST BALTIC

As the lobster season is drawing to an end the fishermen all say it has been a very poor season and the cod fishing season does not look too hopeful.

Sincere sympathy is extended to the family of the late Mary E. Cairns who passed away suddenly at the home of her sister Mrs. A. Weagle, Souris West.

Mrs. William and Mrs. Alma Ching were recently hostesses to the members of the UBMS at their home in Red Point.

FINANCE MINISTER IS QUERIED ON WHEAT DEAL WITH RUSSIA

OTTAWA (CP)—Flour content of the 336,000,000 bushels of wheat Canada sold to Russia totals 45,000,000 bushels, Finance Minister Sharp told the Commons.

Replying to H. A. Olson (SC—Medicine Hat), Mr. Sharp said a third of the wheat flour will be shipped in the first year of the three-year contract.

Mr. Sharp also told Mr. Olson he did not know whether any was to be shipped through West-Coast ports.

The Russian sale, announced earlier this month, is for deliveries spread over three years beginning Aug. 1.

Stanley Korczynski (PC—MacKenzie) asked Mr. Sharp, who oversees the Canadian wheat board, how much of the Russian purchase will be shipped through the northern Manitoba port of Churchill on Hudson Bay.

Mr. Sharp said the sale agreement made provision for the shipment of some wheat through Churchill if Russia wishes. The amount will depend on the buyer.

DEPENDS ON BUYER
Eldon Woolliams (PC—Row River) asked Mr. Sharp whether Canada had discussed with Russia extension of the delivery period for Canadian wheat under the current agreements.
