WEEK-END TAXI TO PARIS

HAILING a London taxi to take you to Paris for the week-end, with the driver acting as your host and guide, may soon be the rage for week-end holiday makers. London taxi owner-driver Leslie Wightman has started a regular taxi service to Paris at the inclusive fare of £25. The passengers are driven to Lympe Airport and fly, together with the taxi, across the Channel in a "Bristol" freighter to Le Touquet.

The passengers are collected from their London hotels and are driven down to Lympe Airport. At the airport a giant "Bristol" freighter plane stands on the tarmac waiting to fly the taxis and their passengers to Le Touquet. The freighter can carry only two of the taxis on one trip to France. The taxis are driven up the ramp into the hold of the freighter, the passengers take their seats at the rear of the plane, and are flown to Le Touquet, the actual flying time being only twenty minutes.

On arrival in France, the taxis are unloaded and are driven off to Paris, the passengers disregarding the ever-mounting meter because the fare is fixed before leaving England.

Speeding along the famous Route Nationale 1, known to thousands of British motorists who have travelled by road to Paris, the London taxis are now a familiar sight to the French villagers. In Paris, hotel rooms are booked for the passengers, who, with the taxis always at their disposal, can visit places known the world over, to name a few—the Eiffel Tower, the Cathedral of Notre Dame, the Palace at Versailles and the Louvre.
