REPORT CORRECTED - An earlier incorrect report indicated that the power was believed to have been turned off in the area in Kensington in which Mr. Gordon Rix was electrocuted on Wednesday afternoon while making an electrical connection. It was learned yesterday however, from the foreman, Mr. Elmer MacEachern, that he and Mr. Rix were fully aware that the power was on the line. He explained that there was a three phase line running into Kensington with a normal load of 6900 volts carried by each line. One of the fuses had been opened on the current passing through the three phase bank of transformers which left a normal load on two lines and about two-thirds of the normal voltage still flowing in the "open" line. While shifting his position at work near the top of the pole in Kensington, Mr. Rix slipped when one of his climbing bars was prevented from falling by his safety belt but swung around the pole and came in contact with the power line which caused instantaneous death.

Former S'ide Girl To Head Division In N. S. Economic Ills Investigation

HALIFAX (CP) - The Nova Scotia government made the province's economic ill a family matter Tuesday by setting up an industrial research division which will poke into everything from the trend in the labor force to the sale of gypsum.

Trade Minister Wilfred T. Daulphine announced the appointment of Miss Zilphia Linkletter to head a new section which will be known as the industrial economic research and development service.

Miss Linkletter has been a labor department economist for seven years. She saw wartime service with the prices board at Ottawa.

Mr. Bigelow is a longtime secretary manager of the Maritime Lumber Bureau, has wide experience in the pulp and paper industry and has worked for both lands and forests and agriculture and marketing departments.

The appointments were made at a time when several phases of the Nova Scotia economy are unsettled due to sales and production problems. Chief among these is the coal industry of Cape Breton which directly employs 13,000 persons.

Abbles Survive

Four Summerside hits and four Abble errors produced Holman's seven runs in the last inning. Most damaging blow was Joe Bernard's double.

Ralph Pineau and Earl MacKinnon hit doubles for the winners while Terry Rogerson, Jimmy Grady, and Joe Bernard had doubles for the losers.

Earl MacKinnon of the Abbies and Jimmy Grady each had three hits. Vance Harris of Holman's had two.

Defensive highlights were provided by the Abbies outfield trio of Earl MacKinnon, Phil Murphy and Elmer MacNeill.

Psychological Discounts Are Not Taxable

OTTAWA (CP) - The income tax appeal board has ruled that "psychological" discounts granted by people in an effort to make them pay their bills on time are not taxable.

The board made the ruling in a judgment allowing an appeal by the McDonald-Dure Lumber Co. Ltd., Winnipeg, against the minister of national revenue.

During the 1950 taxation year, the company reported to the income tax department that its receivable accounts amounted to $221,147. It deducted from this amount $41,147, representing the value of discounts paid back to customers for paying their bills when due, reducing its taxable income to $180,000.

The board said it is the practice of the company to add 10 to 15 per cent to the purchase price of its lumber. The 10 to 15 per cent is discounted if the customer pays his bills on time.

The board said the discount is added to the bill for the psychological effect "the customer who 'was led to believe that by paying his account promptly his bill would become 10 per cent less'."

The revenue department allowed the company to deduct $10,473, the amount of its 1949 deduction. However, the board permitted the company to deduct the full $41,147.

The board said the department was not entitled to treat the discounts as an amount transferred or credited to a reserve, contingent account or sinking fund and subject to tax. It based its ruling on previous judgments.

British Soccer Season To Open

LONDON (AP) - England's 1954-55 soccer season kicks off Saturday with only last season's form as a guide. There were no big money trades or purchases during the summer and teams are relying on new training ideas and home-developed players.

Sunderland's failure last season scared clubs away from the player market. The northern club set out in 1953 with a team worth about £250,000 pounds. It bought stars like center half Ray Daniel, forward Billy Elliott and Ted Purdon and goalkeeper Jimmy Cowan. But Sunderland found money could not buy success and finished fifth from the bottom.

This time Sunderland is relying on the old guard. The stars will more accustomed to each other's play and are expected to be in the running for league honors.

14-year Term For Attack On Woman

TORONTO. (CP) - An ax and butcher-knife attack on a woman has brought a 14-year penitentiary sentence for Kiril Vakilinov 43. In addition, Magistrate C. A. Thoburn recommended that Vakilinov be deported.

The magistrate described the case Thursday as "the most diabolical within my experience on the bench."

Vakilinov pleaded guilty to a charge of wounding with intent to maim. He told police he struck Mrs. Marie Mihalides with an ax and knife after an argument over money. He said he had intended to kill her.

Mrs. Mihalides, mother of three children, was found unconscious in her kitchen.

Appointment At Dalhousie U

HALIFAX (CP) - President A. E. Kerr yesterday announced that Alan H. Thomas of Waltham, Mass., has been appointed assistant director of adult education director at Dalhousie University.

Thomas, a former marine and graduate of Springfield College, is married and has two children. His wife, whom he met at Springfield, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Rohaker of Grandville Ferry, N. S.

Royal Visitors To Call At Old Ursuline Cloister

QUEBEC (CP) - Two Royal visitors next week will tread the centuries-weathered stone floors of the Ursuline monastery's vaulted corridors where lie behind cloistered walls some of Quebec's most prized relics of history.

The Duchess of Kent and her daughter Princess Alexandra, arriving Sunday for a Canadian tour, are scheduled to pay a 30-minute call Thursday at the establishment, visited incognito by the Duke of Kent in 1941, less than a year before he died tragically in an air accident in England.

The chic duchess and her 17-year-old daughter will sign the golden book of the monastery's relatively rare guests and then tour the institution. It was founded in 1639 and now is a select French-language girls' school.

Here early Jesuit martyrs walked, English and French soldiers wounded in the battle of the Plains of Abraham in 1759 were treated without discrimination, defied General Montcalm's orders and buried, French Canada's first English governor Murray set up quarrels and won the admiration of the French sisters by threatening to court-martial any English soldier who acted disrespectfully in the cloister.

Nearly all French or English religious and government personalities in Quebec history have at one time or another visited the old monastery.

When the duchess and her daughter call on the Ursulines Tuesday they will be greeted by the entire religious body of 125 nuns. Royal visits are part of the tradition of this monastery's secluded existence.

King's Sons Called

A son of King George III, Duke of Kent 163 years ago, visited the monastery and attended a ceremony. Another son, Prince William Henry, called on the nuns in 1787.

King Edward VII, when he was Prince of Wales, and a daughter of Queen Victoria, Princess Louise, visited the monastery in 1860 and 1879, respectively.

All male visitors must obtain a dispensation from the Quebec Roman Catholic archbishop to enter the cloister but no permission is required by women visitors.

The monastery was founded by Mother Marie de l'Incarnation and Madame de la Peltrie. The main structure was built in 1642 and still stand intact although fire damaged other monastery buildings twice.

The chapel, the only part of the monastery open to the public, was reconstructed in 1902 with materials salvaged from an earlier structure.

Stranger In My Old Home Town

By Hal Murphy

As we bounced along the Shore Road, the Gulf St. Lawrence looking like a dark blue mirror before us, Clarence, seemingly lost in thought, murmured as he looked out at the rolling breakers, "Mighty nice piece of water out there, but it sure is eating up the Island little by little. Why, I can remember when a lobster factory was going full swing on that spot where now all you can see is water, and plenty of it."

As we passed each farm he would gaze intently about, looking for any changes that might have taken place since the last time he passed this way. "See that the Gavin boys are busy spreading Irish Moss around the yard. Yes sir, that moss is the greatest thing that ever happened around here. Everybody and his brother go down to the shore and rake it up. They get about a cent a pound for it. Oh, turn by here, this is Sandy Shea's place. He's not feeling so well lately. There's his boys out in the yard. Mighty fine boys Sandy has, great workers."

After a short visit with the Sheas we drove on until we came to the Dorgan Farm, brief chat with Leo, his new wife and his mother, and then on to the farm-most tip of the Island, North Cape. Reaching our destination, we got out of the car and wandered about the windswept acre of land dedicated to the safety of fishermen from many ports as they sweat and strain against nature's elements in the path that the dinner tables of the world will be laden with delicacies from the depths of a bountiful sea.

As I strolled over to the very tip of the Cape and looked down at the turbulent seas that crashed against the rock, the sea gulls screamed and seemed annoyed that I had entered their domain. I turned and looked up at the lighthouse that towered proudly over land and sea, and thought how lonely, yet how wonderful and how far removed, this tip of Eden is from the rest of the world. No screaming hysterical madmen yelling "War! Atomic weapons! Blood baths! No television shows with murder as their plots showing the gentle viewers how to kill without being detected. No wailing telephones... no roaring subways... no screeching brakes as two cars racing towards each other at the rate of seven miles an hour try to avoid splitting each other in two. No, none of man's improvements have spilled over this "Garden of Eden" as you can see and hear is the gulls, the sea and the wind as it whispers softly in your ear the forgotten melody, peace.

We entered the snug little home nestled in the shade of the light and exchanged some sparkling repartee with the "Keeper of the Light," Pierre Morrissey, Clarence's younger brother and a wit of no mean ability.

Sunset found the "Goose" with his happy passengers heading for Tignish town, the Morrisseys' residence and a supper fit for all the Murphys still at large in an unsuspecting world.

That evening I went to pay my respect to a man whose life could favorably compare with Horatio Alger. This kind, softspoken gentleman of distinction started his eventful life in Tignish, worked in Boston as a streetcar conductor, returned to his homeland where he engaged in merchandizing until he accepted one of the highest positions that his country can bestow on one of its citizens, that of Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island. Joseph A. Bernard is the man of whom I speak. His governorship term over, he has returned to his beloved town, his family, his business, and his golden memories. (To be concluded)

As I entered the large Bernard home and shook hands with Mr. Bernard, the years rolled back to my youth and the pleasures we young ones would enjoy on Sunday afternoon when Mr. Bernard would hitch a sleigh behind his car and haul every kid in town around the countryside at a speed that provided thrills galore for the little adventurers glued wide-eyed to the sled. The distinguished gentleman sat in his favorite chair and wove a story of glamour, celebrities and life as he lived in the Government House in Charlottetown.

Then with the enthusiasm of a man much younger in years, he leaned over, tapped my knee and said: "You know, I shipped out four cartloads of potatoes this morning." Here was a man who had seen and done just about everything and yet he still got a youthful thrill out of seeing a job well done! I think that is the difference between their generation and ours; we want everything done for us, they overcome obstacles by doing it themselves and enjoyed doing it.

I was invited to stay the night and being an accomplished beggar accepted with relish. A good night's sleep put me in a delightful frame of mind for an incident that will live in my mind for many years! I was sitting in the kitchen when someone knocked at the door. I went out and saw a man standing there who in my youth was like a father to me. He looked about the same. His rain-soaked hat shaded his eyes and as he gazed intently at me, a smile crinkled his face from ear to ear, then he said almost shyly, "Hi, Harold, heard you were in town, thought I would drop by and say hello."

"Gregory McGinnis! It's great to see you, you haven't changed a bit," I exclaimed.

"Well, things are about the same, although I am married - now and have a son. When are you coming out to the farm? You must come before you go back."

"I most certainly intend to, Greg. How's your father?"

"Just as spry as ever; Max is fine too, has a grand family now. And so it went for another ten minutes, then Greg departed with my promise to visit with him soon. As I watched him walk down the path a great wave of tenderness swept over me, for Gregory McGinnis and his mother, Florrie, did much to make a man out of a boy who at times thought the world and all the people in it were against him. Florrie is dead now, but her wisdom and strength live on in her family, one of whom, when he heard I was in town, decided to drop by and say hello."

Next day I managed to see more people that I had known as a youth. Foster Skerry, who, when I left Tignish, was slugging on the Square weighing meat on an old fashioned hand scale, was doing the same thing seventeen years later. Hope it wasn't the same piece of meat! Eugene Perry, a fun-loving fellow who walks like a human windmill, his arms going in all directions, hasn't changed much, still full of pepper and funny stories.

A tasteful supper with Stella and Kathleen Brennan was next on the menu. After dinner we gathered around the piano; Stella played, I sang and Kathleen, gracious and polite always, said that she enjoyed my singing. All anyone has to do is tell me that they like my singing - my ears bend forward like a mole's, and away I go into another melody! I make more enemies that way!

Finally the day came when the closing theme of my sentimental journey could be heard. I backed the "Goose" out of the yard and with a final wave, started my trip back to Boston and the daily grind. Before leaving the little town, I decided to have a last look at the church. As I stood looking up at the steeple of the beautiful brick temple moulded from the clay of Tignish, my chest was aching with the work-scarred hands of the townspeople, my reverie was broken by the chatter of two small boys loitering nearby. After staring at me for a few moments, one turned to the other and said, "What's that fellow doing here, eh?"

"Oh" the other answered. "Some stranger from the States. I guess Been walking around town asking questions about people that I never even heard of." I turned and watched the two lads as they wandered off in search of something more interesting than a stranger from the States. Yes, I suppose that they are right in thinking that I am a stranger in town, but I also think that they are wrong as long as names as Morrissey, Bernard, Brennan, Burke, McGinnis, and many others, continue to live in my memories, and as long as I can remember the smiles and other personal mannerisms of fellows like Lennie Burke, Bobby Kinch, Joe Shelton and the rest of my boyhood buddies who have departed this war-torn planet, then I will never be a stranger in my old home town!
