Take-out Trouble

This week we set a minor record for acid indigestion, after our various visits to the snack places of Charlottetown. In the course of our travels, we found banana splits without bananas, hamburgers apparently with no hamburger, and an establishment which turned away free advertisement. Slightly bloated after our consumption of gallons of Eno and cartons of Tums and Roloids, we sat down to write this article. As you may have guessed by now, our mission to the take-out places of Charlotte-town was on some occasions a disaster. However, we did find a few havens in this wilderness of tasteless slops.

Speaking of tasteless slops, we first ventured forth to the A & W. As we brushed the flies away, we tore our gaze from the gum-chewing jaws of the girl preparing the hamburgers, and, shuddering, placed our order. During our twelve-minute wait, what little anticipation we had felt slowly drained away as we scrutinized the interesting patterns of the dirt on the walls and floor. Finally our Teen-burgers arrived, along with a mug of the deservedly infamous diluted orange pop, and the undeservedly famous root beer. We concluded that, whoever's root the beer was run from, apparently didn't have too much to run, since the glass was only half full of root beer, the rest being foam. We must say that the teenburgers were good. Still, reviewing our overall impressions, we felt the A & W as a take out place should be given the Russian solution: it should be taken out to Siberia and left there.

Next we decided to try the A & W's counterpart, MacDonald's. The difference was unbelievable. Instead of filthy floors, we found floors that were scrubbed twice in the short time we were there. During our tour of the facilities, it was impossible not to notice the smiling faces of the staff, as contrasted with the funeral-parlor atmosphere at A & W. The kitchens and working area were spotlessly clean and litter free, in spite of the fact that they had just completed their rush hour. Due to the recent government recommendation that hamburger be cooked above 160 degrees, we inquired about the cooking process. We were told that all burgers were cooked at a minimum of 350 degrees. We watched the staff at work for a few moments noting their efficiency, then went out front and placed our order, which was for a Big Mac, a Quarter Pounder, french fries, milkshakes, and an apple turnover. We were served in thirty two seconds, as compared to our previously mentioned twelve minute wait at the A & W. We then took our orders to the attractive eating area. While eating, we noted the landscaping, done in a distinctive manner with Island stone.

The french fries we found to be excellent, the milkshakes good, and the hamburgers below the level of those at the A & W. The apple turnovers were doughy and tasteless.

In summary, for those who want cleanliness, efficiency, unusually low prices, and adequate food, we recommend MacDonald's, while for those who want adequate burgers, inefficiently prepared and served, at high prices in unsanitary surroundings, we suggest the A & W.

Col. Sanders was our next stop in what came to be a series of culinary catastrophe. The establishment was clean and the staff courteous but twenty and thirty minute waits for a take out store is ridiculous. The snackpacks were not filling enough for half a meal and the prices are too high. The only reasonable deal was the chicken dinner which at 1.85 is still quite enough.

We were not impressed by the famous "Kentucky fried chicken as it seemed to be more "Kentucky Greased" than anything. In sum we did not see anything to justify it as a good place to go to eat.

We now turn to a brief discussion of the pizza places in Charlottetown. We found as a whole, that the price for a pizza was higher than the amount and often quality of the food would justify. The three places reviewed were Happy Shack, Pizza Delight and Pizz House.

We found Happy Shack to be dirty, the pizzas greasy and burnt and the prices high. The only favorable thing to be said for it is that it serves excellent homemade bread

Pizza Delight was also dirty, the pizzas greasy, and the prices high. Furthermore the staff had an unfortunate tendency to suck their fingers after removing pizzas from the oven.

We now come to the third and last, Pizza House, the best of the three, more accurately if less grammatically correct, the least worst. Pizza House is far cleaner than the other two, the staff friendlier and the pizzas good.

However, when one considers that enough pizza for two might cost up to seven dollars, a burger meal for two at MacDonald's would only come to about $2.50 for two. So if you get a craving for pizza, we would recommend making your own, or if you do not have the time or facilities, we suggest Pizza House is the best choice.
