Recollection Day Held At Convent

Members of the Legion of Mary assembled at St. Joseph's Convent, Charlottetown, May 5, for their annual Day of Recollection.

Members attending were from Lady Queen of Peace, and Our Lady Help of Christians, Basilea Parish, Charlottetown; Our Lady of Perpetual Help, Holy Redeemer Parish, Charlottetown; Our Lady Star of the Sea, Georgetown; and Our Lady of Notre Dame Convent, Charlottetown.

At 2 p.m. Rev. William Doucette, CSSR, spiritual director of Our Lady of Perpetual Help Praesidium, spoke to the legionaires. His theme was "The Legionaires and the Council". Beginning with the reminder of the general intention of this month —"The success of the council", Father Doucette went on to speak of the legionaries and their important part in the lay-apostolate, which has a commission dealing with it at the second Vatican council, whose second session pens next September.

Concluding the Day of Recollection, the annual Acies ceremony was held in the chapel. Taking part were the active members of the above praesidia, and auxiliary members.

Father Doucette also spoke at the Acies ceremony, his topic being "The Legionary and What the Promise Means to You". He began with an example of a recent survey taken during the Atom-bomb crisis in the United States. Not one answered in this survey anything about prayer or going to God. Then he went on to exemplify this by citing Cardinal Suenens, Archbishop of Malines - Brussels, who spoke of the dynamic apostolate all lay people must become involved in —"the knowing of Christ is not enough, we must make him known to others; the loving of Christ is not enough, we must help in making Him loved; the serving of Christ is not enough, we must help in bringing others to serve Him."

After the renewal of the act of consecration to the Blessed Virgin, Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was given by Father Doucette. The singing of a hymn by the Sisters' Choir of St. Joseph's Convent brought the ceremony to a close.

MARY HAWORTH

Week's Lodging Turns Into Permanence For Women

Dear Mary Haworth: Towards the end of last year an elderly female acquaintance came to our house, asking refuge for a week, as she had just lost her job.

My wife and I agreed to take her in. She is still with us and doesn't seem to be making much effort to even find another job.

I have told her she will have to get out. She is hard to get along with and seemingly tries, more or less, to take possession of certain things in our home. My wife says this woman has a crush on me, which I find hard to believe as she is old enough to be my mother.

We don't like to put her out in the street when she doesn't seem to have any support. Is there any home for persons like this?

E.E.

Dear E.E.: Make an appointment with the local Legal Aid Bureau (there is an excellent unit in your town), to get first-hand information on how to put this woman in line for a retirement - age pension or community aid to the indigent.

The general tenor of her inappropriate behavior — in attaching herself to your household without warrant, leaning upon your largesse, neglecting to look for employment, having a crush on you, etc. — plus the fact that she is elderly, suggests that she may be (as the phrase is) "a little off."

The business of coping with existence and fighting for survival may be getting beyond her nowadays. Something of the kind may account for the loss of her job. She may be coasting downhill, on the slope that used to be known as senile decay, but more recently is linked to hardening of the arteries, which gradually fogs the mind.

Maybe that's why she is making so little effort to help herself and why she clings to you as a child to its parent, meanwhile taking unreasonable charge of some of your possessions.

It is decent of you to have housed her thus far, with baffled tolerance. But as she is neither a close friend nor a relative but only an acquaintance, becoming progressively burdensome and difficult, it seems incumbent to bring her needs to the attention of community authorities, while she is still in condition to speak for herself in choosing amongst alternatives they may propose.

To let the situation drift indefinitely is to weakly encourage her in the false hope that you may care for her permanently — which is not your intention, as I get the message.

M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: I have been engaged for over a year. Just recently I broke the engagement because of misunderstandings and complications.

We intend to stay friends, possibly dating occasionally and maybe even patching things up eventually. But the immediate question is, what to do with the many engagement gifts given me by my family and friends and by his relatives, at a surprise shower soon after the announcement was made.

Should all these gifts be returned? Or just those given me by his people? Some say the latter, but I am not sure. What do you advise?

P.P.

Dear P.P.: As a rule engagement gifts to a girl are of a rather personal, perishable nature: lingerie, cosmetics, items of personal adornment, possibly bed, bathroom or kitchen linens. All of which may be either still packed away or else somewhat the worse for wear after a year-long engagement has expired.

Thus the counter - question is: are your gifts in returnable shape? Those that are, send back. As to the others, keep them; but to square yourself with these donors, write a muted note, saying the engagement is off but you will always cherish their good wishes as signified in their gracious gift you've enjoyed so much.

Pond Peepers Play Their Best Tunes In Maytime

Now as the May - month continues to walk the spring's paths, the pond-peepers play their best tunes. We heard them this evening when we came to gather up the kindling for the weekend, James had made in the woodshed. Then it was threaded in delightfully with the chant of the birds. But now it is their music alone which lends enchantment to the night. And hearing, it is to remember, alas, there is only one springtime to the year.

Carrie Jacobs Bond, of blessed memory for her gift of song-writing, tells an interesting story - indeed one with a moral - of this, as she found it, "One of the night's loveliest sounds."

"At a wayside shack, just off a highway where we stopped to inquire directions," she relates, "a wistful looking woman, drawn into conversation said, 'We don't have any music, we haven't a radio, and we don't go to town. I wish I was you - all.' Behind the shack was a little pond, where, in the shade of overhanging willows, some ducks drifted lazily.

"Have you any frogs in your pond?" I inquired, and she said indifferently, 'Yes, and they croak every night.' "

"In my hillside garden the frogs have a choral which I would not exchange for any other. When twilight comes, the big basso tunes up, directs and leads, and soon the woodland music of a score of lusty throats take up the symphony, deep and tuneful, in a manner peculiar to frogs. To me, this is of the night's loveliest sounds. Often we silence the radio, which we enjoy in its way, to get the quivering chorus of the little brown and green choristers of the pool. There is no other music like it. At dawning, the twittering and calling of the birds awaken the sleeper. During the day, the gladsome note of the feathered songsters is heard over the garden."

"This poor deaf woman had let her ears be tuned to the horizon, and never knew that she was missing the wonderful harmonies of nature. Just so often we fix our eyes on the 'Apples on the other side of the wall' ".

"Of course it was lonesome without music. Anyone will appreciate that. But when I asked her about frogs and bees, she said 'Does you get anything out of that?' I replied, 'Yes, I've brought them all the way from the country just to hear their music. 'Then I asked her to listen, and she had a new vision of the music about her."

And another May - week goes now. It brought farm - folks nearer to the course of the cropping. . .It gave us at Alderlea, among other items of the season, lambkins, white - faced, dark - faced, white, or black, winsome creatures, with thin quavering bleats not unlike those of a babe, new - born. And all the time, we followed our day by day round. And found gratefully that when "lifted up", its tasks were after all our privileges. It was L. M. Alcott, who in the long ago wrote:

"I am glad a task to me is given
To labor at day by day;
For it brings me health and strength and hope
And I cheerfully learn to say:
'Head you may think; Heart you may feel;
But Hand, you shall work always.' "
