

Socialist India Is Seeking New Aid From Capitalists

This week, the AP World Spotlight focuses on India's departure from old practices and the wooing of foreign capital to increase fertilizer production. It also looks at the involved and tense U.S. relations with Egypt, and sees the British seamen's strike as a last straw in Prime Minister Wilson's attempts to put the country's industry on a solid, modern footing.

years of government economic planning, is launching a new flirtation with capitalists around the world.

New Delhi has decided India's internal resources and even the massive flow of foreign aid are not enough to feed the nation's 495,000,000 and rescue its sinking economy.

This has turned government eyes to the private investor, with his dollars, pounds sterling or Japanese yen—plus his technical and managerial skills.

To Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's leftist critics, this means India is confessing it will court the devil, if necessary, to avoid a political crisis that could explode from continued economic decline.

Mrs. Gandhi is pushing ahead, denying she is betraying the goal of socialism laid down when India became independent in 1947.

American, Canadian and Japanese investors are high on India's list.

PLAN VISITS

A delegation led by Cabinet Secretary Dharma Vira is scheduled to leave New Delhi June 20 to visit the three countries for talks with potential investors in India's fertilizer, petrochemical and pesticide industries.

Scores of foreign and Indian studies of India's inability to feed itself inevitably have led back to a lack of chemical fertilizers and pesticides. Concessions: surprising in view of past hostility to foreign capitalists, are being granted fertilizer investors.

The government's aim is an annual production of 2,500,000 tons of nitrogenous fertilizers by 1970-71. Last year production was about 240,000 tons.

Foreign investments dropped steadily in India in the last 10 years and much of the Indian bureaucracy still silently resists new trends. Many businessmen complain also that once their money is in India, government restrictions make it difficult for them to operate efficiently.

Opening lead—jack of spades. It is sometimes possible to pull an apparently hopeless contract out of the fire. For an example of how this may occur, let's look at this hand from a team match.

At the first table, South got to four hearts and West led the jack of spades. The queen lost to the king and East returned a spade to the ace.

Declarer played a low trump to the ace. West showing out, and later lost a heart, a diamond and a club to go down one. He could have made the contract had he covered East's six with the seven when he conviction that the United States is actively supporting forces in the Middle East hostile to Egypt with the intention of weakening the "Arab socialist" state he is building.

Egyptian commentators cite U.S. arms aid to Israel, American backing of Saudi Arabian King Feisal, differences over Yemen, and delay in action on a food request to Washington.

The latest U.S. sale of military equipment to Israel inflamed the Cairo press. Publisher Mohammed Hakkal Nasser's close friend and regarded as his spokesman, commented in his newspaper, Al-Ahram:

"The United States doesn't want friends in the Middle East. It wants only agents."

Vice-President Abdel Hakim Amer reflected Nasser's views in a widely publicized address to Egyptian troops stationed in the Sinai, near the Israeli frontier. He said:

"The American arming of Israel is not surprising to us, since the United States is the foster father of Israel. Our source of armament is the Soviet Union and it will also re-encourage withdrawal.

In the Yemen, the American aim has been to encourage withdrawal of all Egyptian troops to lessen the pressure from Nasser on Saudi Arabia and the South Arabian Federation states now subjected to revolutionary propaganda from Radio Cairo. Nasser seems determined to maintain the Egyptian presence in Yemen.

Critics of the U.S. aid program to Egypt claim that nothing can be shown as a return on more than $1,500,000,000 worth of American economic aid put into Egypt since Nasser came to power in 1952.

In response, American officials stress what they call "a friendly American presence in Egypt."

The ambiguous term means in fact that through its economic aid, the United States can seek to influence the course of Egyptian policy in the Middle East, to soften "the voice of Radio Cairo's revolutionary propaganda broadcasts, and to persuade Nasser not to inflame potential spots, adhering to a policy of nonalignment.

LONDON (AP)—They call it "the English disease." It sums up Europe's diagnosis of Britain's commercial lethargy, staid resistance to change and its belief that "British is best."

The Labor government's initial steps at reform have failed to stave off the symptoms of a new economic crisis, coming perhaps this fall. Exports are running at seven per cent above last year, but this gain is cancelled out by a rise in imports. Growth and productivity are up less than two per cent.

The seamen's strike could be the last straw. It put pressure on the government's voluntary wage and price restraint policy and led to talk about stopping inflation by a wage and price freeze. In that type of a siege economy, chances of winning public support for basic reforms would be diminished.

Although Prime Minister Wilson has appealed for "a Dunkerque spirit," the impact of the nation's economic problems is nothing like that of a war. The shops are full—often with costly imports—and wages have risen by 66 per cent in a decade.

Profits low. But profits are low in shipping and bargaining has been bitter. Shipboard distinctions between officers and seamen are acute—different food, even different soap. This fosters the mistrustful mentality of "them and us" that poisons relations between management and unions.

A random sampling of some other basic industries presents much the same picture.

The gas industry is exploding with the discovery that this island is sitting atop a big natural gas bed. But when the government went shopping for "big-inch" pipes delivery dates ranged from 12 to 18 months. Scottish shipyards, once led the world, but now the industry is virtually profitless before the winds of international competition.

The problem is not lack of brains, but a lack of their application, many critics say. Forty-five per cent of the directors of British companies come from Oxford or Cambridge, which means their education was almost entirely in liberal arts or economics. The scientists and engineers are largely in middle-level management. They advise on major decisions but don't make them.

Born in Bloomfield Station, N.B., Prof. Raymond received his bachelor of science degree from Macdonald in 1911 and joined the agronomy department in 1913. He remained there until he was named professor emeritus in 1959.

As a tribute to his work he was made a life member of the Canadian Seed Growers Association in 1954 and a fellow of the Agricultural Institute of Canada in 1949.

He is survived by a son, Frank, of Vancouver.
