

plant, when he predicted that Georgetown was about to become the great town that Destiny intended it to be. And there is good reason indeed to look forward to a busy and prosperous future.

According to the company president, Mr. Jens Moe, the new establishment will be the largest fully integrated plant of its kind in Canada, employing many workers from the sea and the fields of Prince Edward Island. The company will embark on an intensive job training program as a preliminary to its operations. The target date for the official opening of the plant is May 1, 1965, and it was noted that already an excellent job has been done in the construction of Bathurst Marine Ltd., another project of major importance to the community.

All our citizens rejoice in the fact that Old Man Opportunity (perhaps the Premier was right in calling him Destiny) is again knocking at Georgetown's door; that this beautiful section of the Province will once again become a hive of industry, and on bigger scale than in the past. It is a heartwarming prospect, and highly creditable to all concerned in getting the movement under way.

Important Conference

This is the 19th annual meeting of the Fisheries Council of Canada which is now in session in Charlottetown, and it may be regarded as the most important one in view of the federal program of fisheries development which is now taking shape, following the federal-provincial fisheries conference last January. This program is being discussed at the current meeting, and its importance was underlined by the federal minister, Hon. Mr. Robichaud, in his opening address yesterday.

Mr. Robichaud was optimistic with regard to the prospects in the fisheries industry, in view of the outlook for an expanding economy in North America through 1964. This expansion, he conceded, by no means implies the elimination of many pressing problems, but it does create a favourable climate, and there is encouragement in recent developments in the industry itself, in the way of additional new vessels and the improvement of existing vessels in the fishing fleets, and the new fish processing plants and improvements to older plants.

The manpower of the industry, through experience, through development of new skills by training, and recruitment of technical and managerial personnel, is gaining in its potential productivity and efficiency. It is the aim of the new development program to give impetus to this trend, and to enable the industry to take fuller advantage of the markets, domestic and foreign, which have become accessible by various means of transportation.

The Fisheries Council has played an important part in sparking research and technological programs that have proved of value to the industry in the past. It is a privilege to welcome its members here on this occasion, and to express the confidence of the people of this seagirt province in the beneficial results that will accrue from their deliberations.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Out-of-town members of the Ontario Legislature who strive to keep themselves pure and free from getting in the wicked city of Toronto, says the Globe and Mail, will shortly be able to go through an entire session insulated from such influences almost completely. They will be able to leave their downtown hotel and, after using the subway and a series of underground tunnels, emerge blinking but untainted into the Legislative Chamber.

Apparently nuts (the edible kind) aren't as popular as they used to be. And, according to The Insider's Newsletter, a motivational research study sponsored by a Massachusetts nut company has discovered why: "To the public, nuts suggest overindulgence—and the more sophisticated the nut eaten (egg, cashew, almond, macadamia) the deeper and more violent the eater's suppressed guilt feelings." What's more, peanut-eaters are regarded as "square" by non-peanut-eaters and, in turn, look on cashew-chewers as being "very far up the social totem pole."

Browsing through the records of a century or more ago—an appropriate centennial year pastime—we came across many indications of the prosperity which the Town of Georgetown was then enjoying. In view of its flourishing trade, it had been declared a Free Port by Her Majesty's Government. It had three public and five privately owned wharves, and there was almost constant activity on its waterfront. One could count, not infrequently, as many as 100 ships of the American Fishing Fleet lying in the harbor at one time. And there was shipbuilding, a tannery and other industries, and many fine business establishments, giving employment the year round.

"DR. LIVINGSTONE, I PRESUME"

OTTAWA REPORT by Patrick Nicholson

On Goodwill Tour From Trinidad

Ottawa is welcoming this week right Hon. Dr. Eric Williams, Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, as he travels home from an extensive ten-week tour in Africa, the Middle East and eastern Europe. He is accompanied here by a group of nine cabinet ministers and senior civil servants; he also has at hand his skilled adviser on Canadian affairs, the High Commissioner Wilfred Andrew Rose, who was himself a minister in the cabinet of the short-lived Federation of the West Indies between 1958 and 1962.

There was lively speculation here concerning the reason for the impressive size and status of this mission, from one of his friends, the southern minister in the West Indies, Dr. Williams had a long and fruitful relationship with the opposition in his own island, Prime Minister Pearson, and with External Affairs Minister Peter Martin. He is also meeting other ministers, while the ministers accompanying him are conferring with their opposite numbers in the Canadian cabinets.

TRINIDAD - CANADA TIES Trinidad became an independent nation within the Commonwealth less than two years ago, but she has been a member of the "family" almost as long as Canada. In fact we can boast that we had had trading relations with the island since then that we have been a member of the Commonwealth since the "Federal Palm", to call before the Commonwealth West Indian Islands.

Dr. Williams is a goodwill tour through Africa, the Middle East was designed to enable him to learn of the new nations of the African and Arab worlds.

CITY ASSESSMENTS Six-year results of a two year study of the Tax Assessment Board has been announced by the receipt of the revised assessments and as the property owners gradually recover from the shock of the revised (unconscious) one can readily see why such pains were taken to get the most accurate figures. In the newspapers the assessment of the old assessment with the new one to the decided advantage of the latter.

A casual survey in the writer's area indicates that 20 per cent and more increase is apparent in nearly all cases and this in the old section of the city. The only conclusion that can be drawn is that inflation of most severe nature will shortly be apparent. Wholesale increases in rents, retail prices and the cost of all services must as a consequence ensue and I can hardly believe the situation will be found palatable to our citizens.

The Ontario firm engaged to prepare this assessment apparently possess little knowledge of local conditions, particularly the low income of a great majority of our people. The City Council has been ordered to discuss the Board's findings with the assessors. It is an unusual procedure to say the least. Whether or not it is necessary for the assessors to adapt the new schedule, if taxes ARE levied on this revised assessment the same will be upon them, and along with the Mayor they may expect to be subject to criticism.

Foreign bodies such as a peanut, bead, or an eraser may be responsible. Children tend to mention it because of fear or lapse of memory. These obstructions produce mechanical irritation and the blood will be mixed with purulent material. In an adult, the cause often is obscure. The nose starts bleeding for no apparent reason. A hardened artery in a dry break and the situation is remedied if the individual has high blood pressure.

The heredity of all nosebleeds is caused by hereditary telangiectasia. In this condition the blood vessels are in the membranes of the nose are so fragile they bleed profusely in adults. The nosebleed may be profuse and persistent. Blood transfusions may be needed, particularly when packing the nose fails.

Magic Of The Thirties

Globe and Mail, Toronto

Tears flowed last week when they closed down the Argon Ballroom in Chicago. Here it was, in the 1930s, that band leaders like Wayne King, Benny Goodman, Harry James and Glenn Miller made music as sweet as was heard before or since. Here it was, under a prodigious moon, that they played Josephine, Heartaches, Goodnight Sweetheart, Whistling in the Dark, and King's lame song "The Waltz You Saved For Me."

So many yet another reminder of the 1930s. What a wonderful, terrible, unforgettable time it was. Joy and sorrow, passion, marionette and moonlight, a brave new world, every nickel cup of coffee. Days when 40 cents a jug and roses the one thing that counted. Myrna Loy, William Powell and Alva Loy.
