With All My Love

(By Virginia Bowes)

Clare nodded slowly, her thoughts confused by the implications in the conversation. "Betty's had pretty rough going the last few years," she said. "It would be rather remarkable if she didn't have a case of nerves."

CHAPTER VIII

Clare finished his coffee and looked up at Clare with an open, quizzical expression. "What would you say to having dinner tonight? I could pick you up about seven and we'd drive out to Vaughn's for steak."

Clare concealed her surprise by reaching for a cigarette from her pack lying open on the table.

"Why, I don't know, Clay," she said after she'd lit it and exhaled. "I'd rather planned on eating with Dad at home."

"But he would not be there," Clay replied quickly. "He's going to New York today."

"He is? I didn't know about that."

Clare's surprise was genuine but Clay's reaction was even more so. His clear brown eyes which had been looking deep into hers were suddenly uneasy, and he, too, reached for a cigarette.

"Your right," he said, "maybe he isn't. I just thought that Betty had said that today was the day he was going."

"Wait a minute and I'll see," she said, and she got up and went to the phone booth.

At first she intended to call the office, but realizing that she'd get Betty on the phone first she decided to call home instead. Colby answered.

"No, Miss Clare," he said. "Mr. Calridge will not be here for dinner. His secretary called just a short time ago and Burrows took some things down to his office for him. He's leaving on the 11.30 train. Miss Crowell said he would be home tomorrow evening."

"I see," Clare said slowly. "Well — don't bother with dinner for me either then, Colby. I have an engagement. You can take the evening off if you like."

Clare could feel Clay Hanley's eyes on her from the moment she left the phone booth. She knew he must be kicking himself for the slip that had revealed how much he knew of Stephen Calridge's affairs. But she decided to pretend she hadn't thought that deeply into the affair.

"You were right," she said, laughing as she approached the table. "He's leaving on the 11.30 train. Betty must have told you. Well, it's a date. I'll be ready at seven."

Clare said "Swell," and got up from the table. They walked out to where Clare's car was parked and as she got in behind the wheel Clay said, "Now don't go to any trouble about cocktails. Anything will do." And he laughed, showing his strong white teeth.

Clare laughed, too, finding something infectious about his good humor. "I've given Colby the evening off," she said so there won't be anything fancy. You'll be lucky if you can swallow them."

As she backed the car away from the guardrail she lifted her hand in a wave, and she drove away.

All through lunch at the country club, and even while she bathed and swam around the pool later, on in the afternoon, the thought of an evening with Clay Hanley gave her a strange, deep-inside kind of thrill. She had never known a man like him, a man so intensely masculine, with so crude and hard a refinement. It was almost as if he controlled with half-trigger accuracy the animal that was his real self. He knew all the conventions, he knew courtesy, he had poise and carriage, even a certain charm; but it was as if he saw through all those things and could slip them on like a sweater or a pair of gloves whenever the occasion required. She felt the blood in her face when she thought of it, but it was the basic male in him that attracted her. He was adventurous, but alluring nonetheless. That was why she was going out with him, and she couldn't deny it. She'd shot the rapids in a canoe when she was only 11; she could not resist the temptation, despite her father's warnings. She'd jumped her mother's hunter over the pasture fence the first time she'd had a chance to get on him when no one was around. It was the same thing all over again; it was something in her blood that could not be denied.

Anglo-Iranian Oil Talks Bog Down

TEHRAN, Aug. 19 — (AP) — Anglo-Iranian oil talks bogged down in delay and confusion today. Both sides apparently were trying to dodge responsibility for any breakdown of negotiations.

Deputy Premier Hossein Fatemi said the Iranian reply submitted Saturday night rejected most British proposals for breaking the deadlock that has closed the nationalized, British-owned Anglo-Iranian Oil Company's Abadan refinery.

It had been announced the Iranian reply would be published tonight but after meeting for an hour the negotiators announced it would be held up, apparently for fear it would result in a final break.

W. Averell Harriman, President Truman's special envoy who persuaded both sides to renew negotiations, was believed to have appealed to the Iranians to keep the document under wraps and perhaps redraft it.

Currie-Stretch Wedding

The Long Creek United Baptist Church was the scene of a pretty wedding at three-thirty on Saturday afternoon, July 21st, when Miss Norma Margaret Stretch, daughter of Mrs. and Mrs. F. W. Stretch, St. Catharines was united in marriage with Mr. John Alexander Currie, son of Mrs. Louise and the late Ernest Currie of Rocky Point.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Barbour, pastor of the church, which was tastefully decorated with cut flowers and potted plants.

Mrs. Hector Currie played the wedding music, and the solo "I'll Walk Beside You" was beautifully rendered by Mr. W. R. Shaw.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was attended by her sister, Mrs. Brent Currie as maid of honor, Miss Fuby McEwen as bridesmaid, and her niece, little Miss Brenda Gale Currie as flower girl.

The bride was becomingly attired in a gown of white nylon tulle with lace over satin, with a floor-length veil caught up with a beaded crown. Her only ornament was a double string of pearls, a gift of the groom. She carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses.

The maid of honor wore blue taffeta with shoulder length veil and carried a nosegay of yellow roses and snapdragon.

The bridesmaid wore pink brocade taffeta and net with matching head dress and mitts. She carried a nosegay of pink roses and snapdragon. The flower girl wore yellow frosted organza and carried a basket of sweet peas and fern.

The groom was attended by Mr. Blair McRae of Tea Hill. Ushers were Walter Currie, brother of the groom, and Floyd Stretch, brother of the bride.

reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, where upwards of 100 guests participated in a delicious wedding supper.

The table was centered with a three-tier wedding cake, flanked by flowers, and the toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. Mr. Barber and responded to by the groom.

Immediately following the reception Mr. and Mrs. Currie left on a motor trip through the Maritime. The many useful and beautiful wedding gifts testified to the popularity of the young couple.

For travelling the bride's costume was a navy blue suit with white accessories. On their return they will reside in their new home at Rocky Point.

Previous to her marriage the bride was entertained at a shower given by her friends in the community, at which time she received many lovely gifts.

HIGHFIELD W. I.

The August meeting of Highfield W. I. met at the home of Mrs. Stephen Holroyd with an attendance of nine members. In the absence of the president, Mrs. Holroyd occupied the chair, and the meeting opened with the creed in unison. The roll was called, and the minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The hall committee reported having held weekly dances, and stated that a new orchestra had been hired for the remainder of the season. The hall committee for the next month consists of Mr. Campbell, Mrs. Ranahan, Mrs. Neal and Mrs. John Holroyd.

The treasurer then gave his statement, and it was moved and seconded that all bills be paid which includes an amount owing to South Winsloe W. I. for ice cream and at the school picnic. The correspondence was read and discussed.

Mrs. Bryenton invited the next meeting to be held at her home on Wednesday, Sept. 12. The luncheon committee will be Mrs. Saunders and Mrs. Sellick, sandwiches by Mrs. Perley Taylor and Mrs. Weeks, sweets.

The meeting then adjourned after which lunch was served to the hosts and the committee in charge.
